connected buildings, fortified for defence against an enemy, a fortified residence, a fortress. Castles, in the sense of fortified residences, were an outgrowth or institution of feudalism, and were first brought to a high pitch of strength and completeness by the Normans. In England there were few or no castles, properly speaking, till the time of William the Conqueror, after which a great many were constructed on the Norman model. At first the donjon or keep was the only part of the castle of great strength, and the other buildings in connection with it were more or less of a temporary nature. In the thirteenth century, however, the design of the castle became more fully developed, and the keep formed only the central part of a group of buildings, all supporting each other, and mutually contributing to but it was much stronger than the latter weapon, and was worked by machinery. In the ancient cat, which represents a catapult of the later period when no distinction was made between it and the ballista, it represents the end of a strong lever, which revolves on an axis and is held down by a windlass. At the extremity is a fork &c. with the prongs curving slightly upward as to afford a hold for a barrel of combined little matter or iron confined by a rope with a loop at the end, the loop being passed through a hook. When the lever is released it bounds suddenly upwards, the centrifugal force causing the loop to slip off the hook, whereupon the barrel held on the fork is liberated and projected towards its object. It shows rings of iron, stone, or lead, increasing the rebound. 2. A small forked stick, each prong of which is attached to an elastic band, generally provided with a piece of leather in the middle, used by boys for throwing small missiles, such as stones, peas, paper pellets, and the like. Catapultic (ka-tap'ul-tik) a. Catechin, Catechine (kat-ē-shin), n. [From catechu.] A peculiar principle, composed of carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen, contained in that portion of catechu which is insoluble in cold water. It forms a fine white powder composed of silky nodules. It exists not merely in catechu, strictly so called, but also in gambier and some kinds of cinchona-bark.

Catechisation, Catechization (kat-ē-kiz-ā'shon), n. The act of catechising.

Catechise, Catechize (kat-ē-kiz), v.t. pret. & pp. catechised, catechized; ppr. catechising, catechizing. [Gr. katechizō, to catechize; a form derived from katechō, to sound, to utter sound, to teach by the voice—kata, down, and echo, to sound, whence echo.] 1. To instruct by asking questions, receiving answers, and offering explanations and corrections; specifically, so to instruct on points of Christian doctrine. 'Catechize gross ignorance.' Burton.—2. To question; to interrogate; to examine or try by questions, and sometimes with a view to reproof, by eliciting answers from a person which condemn his own conduct.

I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet
And catechized in every street. Swift.

Catechiser, Catechizer (kat-ē-kiz-ēr), n. One who catechises; one who instructs by question and answer, and particularly in the rudiments of the Christian religion.

Catechism (kat-ē-kizm), n. [Gr. katechismos, instruction. See CATECHISE.] 1. A form of instruction by means of questions and answers, particularly in the principles of religion.—2. An elementary book containing a summary of principles in any science or art, but appropriately in religion, reduced to the form of questions and answers, and sometimes with notes, explanations, and references to authorities. The catechism of the Church of England in the first book of Edward VI., 7th March, 1549, contained merely the baptismal vow, the creed, the ten commandments, and the Lord's prayer, with explanations; the part relative to the sacraments being subjoined at the revision of the liturgy during the reign of James I. The catechism of the Church of Scotland is that agreed upon by the Assembly of Divines at Westminster, with the assistance of commissioners from the Church of Scotland, and approved of by the General Assembly in 1648. Luther's German catechisms appeared in 1529.

Catechismal (kat-ē-kiz-mal), a. Pertaining to or after the manner of a catechism; catechetical.

Catechist (kat-ē-kist), n. [Gr. katechistēs.] One who instructs viva voce, or by question and answer; a catechiser; specifically, one appointed by the Church to instruct in the principles of religion.

Catechistic, Catechetical (kat-ē-kist'ik, kat-ē-kist'ik-al), a. Pertaining to a catechist or catechism. 'Some of them are in the catechetical method.' Burke.

Catechistically (kat-ē-kist'ik-al-li), adv. In a catechetical manner.

Catechu (kat-ē-shū), n. [From Tamil (?) katti, tree, and shu, juice, Malay kashu.] A name common to several astringent extracts prepared from the wood, bark, and fruits of various plants, especially by decoction and evaporation from the wood of Acacia Catechu, as well as from the seeds of the palm Areca Catechu, and from the Uncaria Gambier. Catechu is one of the best astringents to be found in the materia medica, and likewise one of the most common in use. It consists chiefly of tannin, and is used in tanning, in calico-printing, &c. Called also Cutch.

Catechuic (kat-ē-shū'ik), a. Of or pertaining to catechu.—Catechuic acid. Same as Catechin.

Catechumen (kat-ē-kū'men), n. [Gr. katechoumenos, instructed. See CATECHISE.] 1. One who is under instruction in the first rudiments of Christianity; a neophyte. In the primitive church catechumens were the children of believing parents or pagans not fully initiated in the principles of the Christian religion. They were admitted to this state by the imposition of hands and the sign of the cross.

The prayers of the church did not begin, in St. Austin's time, till the catechumens were dismissed. Wheatley.

2. Generally, one who is beginning to acquire any kind of doctrines or principles.

The same language is still held to the catechumens in Jacobitism. Bolingbroke.

Catechumenate (kat-ē-kū'men-āt), n. The state or condition of a catechumen.

Catechumenical (kat-ē-kū'men'ik-al), a. Belonging to catechumens.

Catechumenist (kat-ē-kū'men-ist), n. A catechumen. Bp. Morton.

Categorematic (kat-ē-gor-ē-mat'ik), a. [Gr. katēgōrēma, a predicate. See CATEGORY.] Conveying a whole term, i.e. either the subject or predicate of a proposition, in a single word.

It is not every word that is categorematic, that is, capable of being employed by itself as a term. Wheatley.

Categorematic (kat-ē-gor-ē-mat'ik), n. In logic, a term employed to signify a word which is capable of being employed by itself as a term.

Categorematically (kat-ē-gor-ē-mat'ik-al), adv. In a categorematic manner.

Categorical (kat-ē-gor'ik-al), a. 1. Pertaining to a category or the categories. — 2. Absolute; positive; express; not relative or hypothetical; as, a categorical proposition, syllogism, or answer.

A categorical proposition is one which affirms or denies a predicate of a subject, absolutely and without any hypothesis.

A categorical answer is an express and pertinent reply to a question proposed.

Categorical (kat-ē-gor'ik-al), n. In logic, a proposition affirming a thing absolutely and without any hypothesis. Categoricals are subdivided into pure and modal. A pure categorical asserts unconditionally and unreservedly; as, I live; man is mortal. A modal categorical asserts with a qualification; as, the wisest man may possibly be mistaken; a prejudiced historian will probably misrepresent the matter.

Categorically (kat-ē-gor'ik-al-ly), adv. In a categorical manner; absolutely; directly; expressly; positively; as, to affirm categorically.

Categoricalness (kat-ē-gor'ik-al-ness), n. The quality of being categorical, positive, or absolute.

Categorize (kat-ē-gor-iz), v. t. To place in a category or list; to class. [Rare.]

Category (kat-ē-gor-i), n. [Gr. kategoria, an accusation, also a class or category, from kategorō, to accuse, show, demonstrate—kata, down, &c., and agorō, to speak in an assembly, to harangue or denounce, from agora, a forum, judicial tribunal, or market.] 1. In logic and philos. one of the highest classes to which objects of thought can be referred; one of the universal forms of existence; predicament. Aristotle made ten categories, viz. substance, quantity, quality, relation, action, passion, time, place, situation, and possession. In the philosophy of Kant the term categories is applied to the primitive conceptions originating in the understanding independently of all experience (hence called pure conceptions) though incapable of being realized in thought except in their application to experience. These he divides into four classes, quantity, quality, relation, and modality, placing under the first class the conceptions of unity, plurality, and totality; under the second, reality, negation, and limitation; under the third, inherence and substance, causality and dependence, and community (mutual action); and under the fourth, possibility and impossibility, existence and non-existence, necessity and contingency. J. S. Mill applies the term categories to the most general heads under which everything that may be asserted of any subject may be arranged. Of these he makes five, existence, co-existence, sequence, causation, and resemblance, or considering causation as a peculiar case of sequence, four.

The categories or predicaments . . . were intended by Aristotle and his followers as an enumeration of all things capable of being named; an enumeration by the summa genera, i.e. the most extensive classes into which things could be distributed. J. S. Mill.

2. In a popular sense, class; order.

Infinite . . . quite changes the nature of beings and exalts them into a different category. Cicero.

Cat, n. [See CATLE, CHATTEL.] Property of all kinds; chattels; goods; valuables.

Let the caterer mind the taste of each guest.
B. Jonson.

Cateress (kāt'er-es), n. A woman who caters; a female provider.

She, good cateress,
Means her provision only to the good. Millon.

Caterpillar (kat'er-pil-lēr), n. [O. E. caterpel, a word of doubtful etymology. By some it is derived from O. Fr. chapoteleuse, a caterpillar, a weevil, lit. hairy she-cat, but this seems questionable. The first part of the word doubtless means cat (comp. cater-waul); perhaps the second part is to be referred to W. pilai, a moth or butterfly.] 1. Properly, the larva of the lepidopterous insects; but also applied to the larva of other insects, such as the Tenthredo or sawfly. Caterpillars are produced immediately from the egg; they are furnished with three pairs of true feet, and a number of fleshy abdominal legs named prolegs, and have the shape and appearance of a worm. They contain the embryo of the perfect insect inclosed within a muscular envelope, which is thrown off when the insect enters the nymph or chrysalis state, in which it remains for some time as if inanimate. It then throws off its last envelope and emerges an imago or perfect insect. Caterpillars generally feed on leaves or succulent vegetables, and are sometimes very destructive. See LARVA.—2. The popular name of plants of the genus Scorpiurus.

Caterpillar-eater (kat'er-pil-lēr-ēt'er), n. 1. A name given to the larva of certain ichneumon flies, from their being bred in the body of caterpillars, eating their way out.—2. A bird of the shrike family which lives on caterpillars. Called also Caterpillar-catcher.

Caucasian (ka-ka'si-an or ka-ka'zhi-an), n. In Blumenbach's ethnological system the highest type of the human family, including nearly all Europeans, the Circassians, Armenians, Persians, Indians, Jews, &c. He gave this name to the race because he regarded a skull he had got from Caucasus as the standard of the human type.

Caucus (ka'kus), n. [American.] A private meeting of citizens to agree upon candidates to be proposed for election to office, or to concert measures for supporting a party. According to one account the name caucus originated in a dispute which occurred at Boston, in New England, a short time previous to the revolution, between a party of English soldiers and the caulkers of the town, in consequence of which some of the citizens were killed by the soldiers. This led to meetings on the part of the inhabitants to concert measures for obtaining redress, and these meetings were by the soldiers called caulkers' meetings, which expression was soon corrupted into caucus meetings. Another and perhaps more plausible derivation, however, is from an Algonkin root meaning to speak, encourage, instigate, whence kau-kaw-wus, a councillor, a 'causer'.

Caudal (ka'däl), a. [L. cauda, a tail.] Pertaining to a tail; of the nature of a tail; having the appearance of a tail. "A small caudal fin." Fennant.

Cavation (ka-vá'shon), n. [See CAVATE.] The act of hollowing or excavating; specifically in arch. same as Cavazion.

Cavazion (ka-vá'shon), n. [It. cavazione, excavation, from L. cavo, to hollow.] In arch. the digging or excavating of the earth for the foundation of a building; the trench or excavation so dug.

Cave (káv), n. [Fr. cave, from L. cavus, hollow, whence also cavity, cavern, and cage.] 1. A hollow place in the earth; a subterranean cavern; a den. 'A cave of stoon (stone).' Chaucer. 'A hollow cave or lurking-place.' Shak. 'Umbrageous grots and caves of cool recess.' Milton.

And Lot went up out of Zoar . . . and he dwelt in a cave, he and his two daughters. Gen. xix. 30.

And after this Abraham buried Sarah his wife in the cave of the field of Machpelah. Gen. xxiii. 19.

Caves are principally met with in limestone rocks, in gypsum, sometimes in sandstone, and in volcanic rocks. Some of them have a very grand and picturesque appearance, such as Fingal's Cave in Staffa, the entrance to which is formed by columnar ranges of basalt supporting a lofty arch 60 feet high and 33 feet wide. Others, such as the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky, which incloses an extent of about 40 miles of subterranean windings, are celebrated for their great extent and subterranean waters; others for their gorgeous stalactites and stalagmites; others are of interest to the geologist and archaeologist from the occurrence in them of osseous remains of animals of the pleistocene period, or for the evidence their clay floors and rudely sculptured walls, and the prehistoric implements found in them, offer of the presence of early man.—2. A name given to a party in the British Parliament who seceded from the Liberals on the reform bill introduced by them in 1866. See ADULLANITES.—4. The ashpit of a glass-furnace.

Cave (káv), v.i. To dwell in a cave. Shak. [Rare.]—To cave in, (a) to fall in and leave a hollow, as earth on the side of a well or pit. (b) Fig. To break down; to yield; to submit; to knock under. [Slang.]

Cave (káv), v.t. To make hollow. 'The mouldered earth had caved the bank.' Spenser.

Cavæ (káv'è-a), n. [L.] Among the ancient Romans, a den or subterranean cell in an amphitheatre, wherein the wild beasts were confined in readiness for the fights of the arena; by synecdoche, the amphitheatre itself.

Caveach (ka-véch'), n. [Sp. escabeche, pickles, pickled fish.] Pickled mackerel: a West Indian name.

Caveach (ka-véch'), v.t. To pickle mackerel according to a West Indian method.

Cavear, Caveer (ka-vér'), n. 1. A money of account at Mocha, worth about a halfpenny. 2. A nominal division of the Spanish dollar, forty cavears making one dollar.

Caveat (káv'è-at), n. [L. caveat, let him beware, from caveo.] 1. In law, a process in a court to stop proceedings, as to prevent the enrolment of a decree in chancery in order to gain time to present a petition of appeal to the lord-chancellor, when the entering of a caveat with his lordship's secretary prevents the enrolment for twenty-eight days. A caveat may be also entered to stop the probate of a will, letters of administration, a license of marriage, or the institution of a clerk to a benefice; and, in some cases, to prevent the issuing of a lunacy commission. In Scotland it signifies an intimation made to the proper officer to prevent the taking of any step without intimation to the party interested, so as to enable him to appear and object to it.—2. [United States.] An instrument lodged in the patent office by an inventor, containing a description of what he claims as his, duly sworn to and attested, and operating as a bar to applications regarding the same invention, till he has had time to perfect it and take out letters-patent.—3. Intimation of caution; hint; warning; admonition. Lord Jeffrey.

Caveat (káv'è-at), v.i. 1. To enter a caveat. 2. In fencing, to shift the sword from one side of that of your adversary to the other.

Caveator (káv'è-at-ér'), n. One who enters a caveat.

Cave-dweller, Cave-man (káv'dwel-ér, káv'man), n. 1. One who dwells in caves, a name given to such of the earliest races of prehistoric man as dwell in natural caves, subsisting on shell-fish and wild animals. Many of the caves which they inhabited bear rude sculptured delineations, chiefly of animals, as deer.—2. A name given to a religious sect, known as the Bohemian Brethren, formed at Prague in the fifteenth century out of the remnants of the Hussites. They got this name because they hid in caves to escape persecution.

Cave-keeper (káv'kép-ér'), n. One who lives in a cave. 'For so I thought I was a cave-keeper.' Shak.

Cave-keeping (káv'kép-ing), a. Dwelling in a cave; hidden.

In men, as in a rough-grown grove, remain Cave-keeping evils that obscurely sleep. Shak.

Cavell (ka-vel'), n. [Sc. kevel, a lot; Icel. kafli, a piece cut off, a bit, a portion; G. kabel, kavel, a lot, a portion.] 1. A part or share.—2. A parcel or allotment of land. [An obsolete or provincial word.]

Cavendish (kav'en-diah), n. Tobacco which has been softened and pressed into quadrangular cakes.—Cut cavendish, cavendish tobacco cut into small shreds.—Cavendish experiment, an important mechanical experiment, first actually made by the celebrated Henry Cavendish, for the purpose of ascertaining the mean density of the earth by means of the torsion balance.

Caver (káv'ér'), n. 1. An offender in relation to the mines in Derbyshire, punishable in the bergmote or miner's court.—2. An officer belonging to the Derbyshire mines.

Cavern (kavérn), n. [L. caverna, from cavus, hollow.] A deep hollow place in the earth; a cave.

Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough To mask thy monstrous visage? Shak.

Cavernal (ka-vér'nal), a. Cavernous. Faber.

Caverned (kav'érnd), a. 1. Full of caverns or deep chasms; having caverns. 'The cavern'd ground.' Philips.—2. Inhabiting a cavern. 'Caverned hermit.' Pope.

Cavernous (kavérn-us), a. [L. cavernosus.] 1. Hollow, or containing a cavern or caverns; as, a cavernous rock. Woodward.—2. Filled with small cavities.—Cavernous texture, in geol. a term applied to that texture of aggregated compound rocks which is characterized by the presence of numerous small cavities, as in lava.

Cavernulous (ka-vér'nú-lus), a. [L. cavernula, dim. of caverna, a cavern.] Full of little cavities; as, cavernulous metal.

Cavesson. Same as Cavezon.

Cave-swallow (káv'awól-ló), n. A species of swallow indigenous to the West Indies, which suspends its mud-formed nest to the roofs of caves on the sea-shore. It is the Hirundo pocilloma of naturalists.

Cavetto (ka-vel'tó), n. [It. from cavo, hollow, L. cavus.] In arch. a hollow member, or round concave moulding, containing the quadrant of a circle, used as an ornament in cornices. The hollow moulding used in the bases between the tori, &c., is also called cavetto.

Cavey, Cavie (káv'vi), n. [D. kevie, G. käfe, käfig, a cage, from L. caves, a cage.] A hen-coop. 'The chicken cavey.' Burns. [Scotch.] Cavesson, Cavesson (kav'éz-on, kav'es-on), n. [Fr. caveçon; It. cavezzone, aug. of cavazza, a halter, from L. caput, the head.] A sort of nose-band of iron, leather, or wood, sometimes flat and sometimes hollow or twisted, which is put on the nose of a horse to wring it, and thus to facilitate the breaking of him in. Called also Cavesson.

Cavia (káv'ia), n. [Native Indian name.] A genus of rodent animals, regarded as the type of the family Cavidae or cavies, and characterized by molars without roots, forefeet with five toes, hinder with three, and the absence of a tail and clavicles. They are natives of tropical America, the most familiar example of this genus being the well-known guinea-pig.

Caviar, Caviare (kav-i-ár' or kav-é-ár'), n. [Fr. caviar, Turk. havidr. The Russ. name is kúrd.] The roes of certain large fish, prepared and salted. The best is made from the roes of the sterlet, sturgeon, severga, and beluga, caught in the lakes or rivers of Russia. From caviare having been regarded as a delicacy too refined to be appreciated by the vulgar taste, we have Shakespeare's application of it to a play which the vulgar could not relish—

'Twas caviare to the general. Hamlet

Cavicorn (kav-i-korn), a. Having the characters of the Cavicornia; belonging to or resembling the Cavicornia.

Cavicornia, Cavicorns (kav-i-kor'ni-a, kav-i-kornz), n. pl. [L. cavus, hollow, and cornu, a horn.] A family of ruminants, characterized by persistent horns (thus differing from the deer) consisting of a bony core and a horny sheath or case covering the bone, in both sexes or in males only. In various species of the antelope the bony nucleus has no internal cavity; in others, as the ox and goat, it is hollow. The first horny case sheds off in the second year, after which the horns become smoother. All the animals of this family form, as appears from their teeth and whole structure, a single natural group, including the antelope, goats, and oxen. The prong-horn antelope, which renews the horny sheath periodically, is the only exceptional member of the group.

Cavids (kav'i-dé), n. pl. The guinea-pig tribe, a family of rodents inhabiting tropical America, where they replace the hares and rabbits of cold climates. The typical genus is Cavia (which see).

Cavil (kav'il), v.i. [O. Fr. caviller, from L. cavillor, to cavil, cavilla, a quibble, trick, shuffle.] To raise captious and frivolous objections; to find fault without good reason; frequently followed by at.

But in the way of bargain, mark ye me

I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair. Shak.

Except by cavilling at two or three words, it seemed impossible for the Roman Catholics to decline so reasonable a test of loyalty. Hallam.

Cavil (kav'il), v.t. To receive or treat with objections; to find fault with.

Wilt thou enjoy the good,

Then cavil the conditions? Milton.

Cavil (kav'il), n. A captious or frivolous objection; an exception taken for the sake of argument; captious or specious argument. 'The cavils of prejudice and unbelief.' South.

That's but a cavil; he is old, I young. Shak.

We are to take no counsel with flesh and blood; give ear to no vain cavils, vain sorrows and wishes. Carlyle.

Cavil (kav'il), n. 1. Naut. a kevel (which see).—2. A stone-mason's axe, with a flat face for knocking off projecting angular points, and a pointed peen for reducing a surface to the desired form; a jeddung-axe. Cavillation (kav-il-lá'shon), n. [L. cavillatio.] The act or practice of cavilling or raising frivolous objections.

I am resolved, when I come to my answer, not to trick my innocence (as I writ to the lords) by cavillations or voidances. Bacon.

Caviller (kav'il-ér), n. One who cavils; one who is apt to raise captious objections; a captious disputant.

Socrates held all philosophers, cavillers and mad-men. Burton.

Cedar (sē'der), a. Made of cedar; belonging to cedar; as, a cedar cabinet.

Cedar-bird (sē'der-bērd), n. The American waxwing (Ampelis americanus or Bombus carolinensis) is so called in the United States from the trees which it chiefly frequents. See WAXWING.

Cedared (sē'dērd), a. Covered or furnished with cedars; as, a cedared mountain-slope.

Cedar-like (sē'dēr-lik), a. Resembling a cedar.

Cedarn (sē'dērn), a. Pertaining to the cedar; made of cedar. 'The carved cedarn door.' Tennyson.

Cedar-wood (sē'dēr-wūd), n. A wood of cedar trees, or wood from cedar trees.

Thou wert born, on a summer morn,
A mile beneath the cedar-wood. Tennyson.

Cede (sēd), v.t. pret. & pp. ceded; ppr. ceding. [L. cede, cessum, to retire, to yield, to grant, to give up. 'A modern word; not in Pope's poems. It occurs in Drummond's Travels (1754).' Skeat. This word enters as an element into a great many English words, such as accede, concede, exceed, precede, recede, secede, abscise, antecedent, anastor, predecessor.] To yield; to surrender; to give up; to resign; to relinquish; as, to cede a fortress, a province, or country by treaty; to cede all claims to a disputed right or territory.

The people must cede to the government some of their natural rights. Fay.

SYN. To surrender, give up, resign, transfer, deliver.

Cede (sēd), v.i. 1. To yield; to submit. — 2. To pass; to be transferred; to fall; to lapse.

This fertile globe, this fair domain,
Had well-nigh ceded to the slothful hands
Of monks libidinous. Shensone.

Cedent (sē'dent), a. Yielding; giving way. [Rare.]

Cedilla (sē-dil'la), n. [Fr. cedille, It. zediglia, a dim. of zelo, the name of z in Greek; because formerly, in order to give c the sound of z, it was customary to write ce; thus, leçon, for modern leçon.] A mark placed under the letter c, especially in French (thus ç), to show that it is to be sounded like z.

Cedrate, Cedrat (sē'drāt, sē'drāt), n. [Fr. cedrat.] 1. A variety of the citron-tree. — 2. The fruit of the tree. The peel is very thick, and covered with an epidermis which incloses a very fragrant essential oil much prized in perfumery.

Cedrela (sē-drē'la), n. [From Gr. kedrelatē, a cedar fir-tree—kedros, cedar, elatē, fir or pine.] A genus of plants, nat. order Cedrelaceae, consisting of large trees natives of the tropics of both hemispheres. The bark is fragrant and resinous; that of C. toona, an East Indian species, is a powerful astringent, and is accounted febrifugal. The bark of C. febrifuga, a native of Java, is said to have a better effect on some of the fevers of India than cinchona. All the species yield good timber, which is sometimes called cedar-wood. C. odorata produces the cedar of Honduras and the West Indies (bastard cedar). C. australis supplies a wood much valued in Australia.

Cedrelaceae, Cedreles (sē-drē-lā'sē-sē, sē-drē-lā'sē), n. pl. [From Cedrela, one of the genera.] The mahogany family, a nat. order of dicotyledonous plants, nearly allied to, if really separate from, the Meliaceae. They are trees with alternate pinnate leaves, and a woody capsular fruit, opening from the apex into three valves, and having a solid woody axis. They are generally fragrant, aromatic, and tonic. Good and durable timber is supplied by many of the species, as mahogany from Swietenia mahagoni, Indian satin-wood from Chloroxylon Swietenia, yellow wood of Australia from Ozleya santhaylia, and bastard cedar from Cedrela odorata.

Cedrelaceous (sē-drē-lā'shus), a. In bot. pertaining to the nat. order Cedrelaceae.

Cedrin (sē'drin), n. A neutral crystallizable salt yielded to alcohol by the fruit of the cedron, after it has been exhausted by ether. The crystals resemble silky needles. It is intensely and persistently bitter, and Lewy regards it as the active principle of the fruit.

Cedrine (sē'drin), a. Belonging to cedar. Johnson.

Cedron (sē'dron), n. A tree (Simaba Cedron), nat. order Simarubaceae, growing in New Granada, the seeds of which resemble a large bean, and are inclosed in a matty, thick, ovoid drupe of the size of a lemon. They are employed as a remedy in that country for serpent-bites, hydrophobia, and intermittent fever. Their qualities are supposed to depend on the presence of cedrin (which see).

Cedrus (sē'drus), n. [L.; Gr. kedros.] A genus of trees closely allied to the genus Larix, which it resembles in having the leaves growing in tufts or bunches, but from which it is distinguished by being evergreen (the leaves not falling in autumn), and by the form of the cones. It includes only three species or varieties, the C. Libani, or cedar of Lebanon; C. Deodara, or deodar; and C. atlantica, or Mount Atlas cedar. See CEDAR.

Cedry (sē'dri), a. Resembling cedar; cedrine. 'Cedry colour.' Evelyn.

commonly a membranous bag with more or less fluid contents, and almost always a nucleus, an epithelial and fat cells. (b) A small soft semi-solid mass of matter with no definite boundary wall, but most frequently appearing to have a small granular substance in the centre, supposed by some to be a nucleus, but now more generally believed to be merely an appearance due to impaction in the glass of the microscope through which it is viewed. Lymph and chyle corpuscles are examples of this second kind. In these the substance composing the enveloping membrane and its contents is homogeneous, being a compound of carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, and nitrogen, the covering being at first simply an infinitely fine indurated outer layer, but thickening as the cell becomes older at the expense of the interior or growing part. To this substance the name of protoplasm has been given, and it is now believed to be the starting point of all animal and vegetable organisms. See PROTOPLASM - 7. In plant, a single jar, bath, or division of a compound vessel, containing a couple of plates, generally copper and zinc, united to their opposites or to each other, usually by a wire. Centre-pin (sen'ter-pin), n. The pivot on which the compass needle oscillates.

Centre-punch (sen'ter-punch), n. A tool consisting of a small piece of steel with a hardened point at one end.

Centre-rail (sen'ter-rail), n. In railways and tramways, a rail placed between the ordinary rails in a track.

Centre-second (sen'ter-ek-on-d), n. A term applied to a watch, clock, or other time-piece in which the seconds-hand is mounted on the central axis and completes its revolution in one minute.

Centre (sen'ter), n. In one sense, a circle the centre of which was the same as that of the earth. The sphere with centre and eccentric attributed to Witten.

Centre, Central (sen'ter, sen'trəl), adj. Placed in the centre or middle, central.

Centrally (sen'trəl-i), adv. In a central position, centrally.

Centrallyness (sen'trəl-i-nis), n. Situation in the centre.

Centrality (sen'ter-i-ti), n. The state of being central.

Centrifugal (sen'trif-ū-gul), adj. [L. centrum, a centre, and fuġis, to flee.] Tending to recede from the centre. The centrifugal force of a body is that force by which all bodies moving round another body in a curve, tend to fly off from the axis of their motion in a tangent to the periphery of the curve, thus the moon in revolving round the earth has a tendency in every point of her orbit, to fly off in the direction of a tangent to that point, and the same is true of all the planets.

Centrifugal force is not a distinct force in a strict sense, but only a certain result of the first law of motion maintained by the action of centrifugal force which commences it.

2 Acting by or depending on centrifugal force or action as, a centrifugal pump, a centrifugal machine, a name given to many machines for raising water, consisting of a hollow cylinder with a reticulated periphery of wire-gauze, and being rotated very rapidly the water (or in the case of sugar the molasses) flies off by centrifugal action. Hence centrifugal sugar, a trade term for sugar thus prepared. 3 In bot expanding first at the summit and later at the base, as a flower. Centrifugal inflorescence is that kind of inflorescence in which the terminal or central flower is the first to expand, as in a tree cyme. The older and vulgar French example. It is also called Definite Inflorescence.

Centring (sen'ter-ing), n. See CENTRING.

Centripetal (sen'trip'e-tal), adj. [L. centrum, a centre, and pate to move toward.] Tending toward the centre. Centripetal force is that force which draws a body towards a centre and thereby acts as a counterpoise to the centrifugal force in circular motion. Gravity is a centripetal force preventing the planets from flying off in a tangent, as the stone does from the string. 2 Progressing by changes from the exterior of an object to its centre, as, the centripetal calcification of a bone. Owen. Specifically, in bot expanding first at the base of the inflorescence, and later at the summit, as a flower. Centripetal inflorescence is that kind of inflorescence in which the lower or outer flower is the first to expand, as in apple racemes, umbels, corymbs, and heads. The laberum, hemlock, onion, and daisy are examples. It is also called Indefinite Inflorescence.

Centripetous (sen'trip'e-tu-əl), adj. Tendency to the centre. [Rare.]

Centrist (sen'ter-i-ti), n. A name given by some zoologists to the Plutalidae, a family of fishes, from Centrum, its typical genus.

Centrist (sen'ter-i-ti), n. [Or centrist, dim. of centrum, a goal or point.] A genus of teleostean fishes of the section Acanthopterygii and family Plutalidae. To this genus belongs the bluefish, trumpet-fish, or sea-magpie of our own coast.

Centristic (sen'ter-i-tik), adj. [Or centrist, the centre, and harm, weight.] Relating to the centre of gravity or method of finding it. Centristic method, a method of measuring the extent of a surface or contents of a solid by means of certain relations subsisting between the centre of inertia (or gravity) of a line and surface generated by it, and between the centre of inertia of a plane surface and solids generated by it.

Centristness, Centristness (sen'ter-i-tis), n. [L. centrum, a centre and ness a line.] An instrument for drawing lines converging towards a point, though the point be inaccessible.

Centristal (sen'ter-i-tal), n. A term applied to lines converging to a centre.

Centristal, n. See CENTRISTAL.

Centropus (sen'ter-pus), n. [Or centrum, a spur and pous, a foot.] A genus of omnivorous birds, natives of New South Wales, belonging to the cuckoo family, so called from the long spur-like claw of the inner toe, the phalarope condition. They bring up their own young.

Centrum (sen'trum), n. [L.] A centre. In anat. the body of a vertebra, the solid piece to which the arches and processes are attached.

Centry (sen'tri), n. A centry or central.

Centry (sen'tri), n. A centry or central.

Centumvir (sen'tum-vir), n. pl. Centumviri (sen'tum-vi-ri), [L. centum, a hundred, and vir a man.] One of a hundred and five judges in ancient Rome appointed to decide criminal cases among the people.

Centumviral (sen'tum-vi-ri-əl), adj. Pertaining to the centumviri.

Centumviral (sen'tum-vi-ri-əl), n. The office or dignity of the centumviri.

Centunculus (sen'tung'ku-lus), [L. dim. of centus, each word also the name of a small plant growing on cultivated ground.] A genus of plants, nat. order Primulaceae, containing a few species of very small annual herbs. The many-headed capsule bursts transversely, as in the allied plumularia. C. minimus (hastard pimpernel) is a native of Britain. It is a very minute plant, with a branched stem, and flowers of a pale rose or white colour. It grows in damp sandy and gravelly places.

Centuple (sen'tup-əl), n. [Fr. centuple, from L. centuplus—centum, a hundred, and plus of place, a fold.] A hundred fold.

1 each its strength were centuple. [Metaphor.]

Centuple (sen'tup-əl), n. 1. centuple, pp. centupled, pp. centupling. To multiply a hundred-fold.

Though my words
Were multiplied upon myself, I could be patient.
—Shakespeare

Centuple (sen'tup-əl), n. 1. centuple, pp. centupled, pp. centupling. [L. centum, a hundred, and plus, a fold.] To make a hundred-fold, to repeat a hundred times.

I performed the devotion you enjoined me to your —Shakespeare

Centurial (sen'ter-i-əl), adj. [L. centuriatus.] Relating to or occurring once in a century or a hundred years. centurial, as, a centurial annals. [Rare.]

Centurial (sen'ter-i-əl), n. [L. centuriatus.] To divide into hundreds.

Centurion, Centurist (sen'ter-i-ən, sen'ter-i-st), n. [Fr. centurion, from L. centurio, a century or from centurio, to divide into hundreds.] An historian or chronologist who distinguishes time into centuries, as in the Universal Church History of Hagedorn. [Rare.]

The centurion of the century was the first that —Shakespeare

Centurion (sen'ter-i-ən), n. [L. centurio, from centum, a hundred.] In Rom. antiq. a military officer who commanded a century or company of infantry consisting of a hundred men. The centurion answered to the captain in modern armies.

Centurion, n. See CENTURION.

Century (sen'ter-i-ty), n. [L. centuria, from centum, a hundred.] 1. In a general sense, a hundred, anything consisting of a hundred in number.

With wild wood-heaven and woods I ha' drew'd his grave,
—Shakespeare

2 In Rom. antiq. a division of the people for the purpose of electing magistrates and enacting laws, the people voting by centuries, also a company consisting of a hundred men. 3 A period of a hundred years. This is the most common signification of the word, and as we begin our modern computation of time from the incarnation of Christ the word is generally applied to some term of a hundred years subsequent to that event, as, the first or second century of the sixth century. If we intend to apply the word to a different era we use an explanatory adjunct, as, the third century before the Christian era, or after the design. Century of Hagedorn, a title given to an ecclesiastical history, arranged in thirteen centuries, compiled by a number of Protestants at Magdeburg. Century plant, a name sometimes given to the American aloes, which was formerly supposed to flower only once in a century.

Centurion (sen'ter-i-ən), n. [L. centurio.] A freeman of the lower rank among the Anglo-Saxons.

Centurion (sen'ter-i-ən), n. [L. centurio.] The common name, the diffusa of botanists.

Centurion (sen'ter-i-ən), n. [L. centurio, an onion, and centus, to devour.] Feeding on onions. [Rare.]

Centurion (sen'ter-i-ən), n. [Or Centurion, the head, and centus, to devour.] An extensive genus of plants, nat. order Rubiaceae, consisting of shrubs or perennial herbs, natives of tropical regions, chiefly in America. Their flowers grow in dense heads, surrounded by involucrate bracts, which are sometimes richly coloured. The most interesting species is Cephaelis Ipecacuanha, which yields the ipecacuanha root of the druggists. It is found in shady woods in Brazil. The root is the part employed in medicine, and has a characteristic ringed structure. It is used as an emetic, its efficacy depending on a white alkaline principle contained in it called emetic.

Centurion (sen'ter-i-ən), n. Relating to cephalalgia or headache.

Centurion (sen'ter-i-ən), n. A medicine for the headache.

Centurion (sen'ter-i-ən), n. [Or Centurion, the head, and centus, to devour.] Headache.

Centurion (sen'ter-i-ən), n. [Or Centurion, a head, and centus, to devour, either from the position of the anthers.] A genus of plants, nat. order Orchidaceae. The plants have tough fibrous roots and broad ribbed leaves. The genus is closely allied to Epipactis, from which, however, it differs in the anthers being terminal and the ovary twisted. There are three British species known by the common name of helleborine.

Centurion (sen'ter-i-ən), n. [See CENTURION.] In bot. the head or capitulum inflorescence of a composite plant.

Centurion (sen'ter-i-ən), n. [Or Centurion, a head, and centus, to devour, either from the position of the anthers.] A genus of plants, nat. order Rubiaceae. The species are shrubs, with small white flowers densely aggregated in spherical peduncled heads. The best known species is C. corallorubra (the bottom-bush of North America).

Centurion (sen'ter-i-ən), n. [Or Centurion, the head, and centus, to devour.] A genus of fossil ganoid fishes, occurring in the red Centurion Lyell.

Centurion. The head is very large, bears a close resemblance to the shape of a maddler's knife, and is protected by a large bristly-shaped plate, which is prolonged into a point on either side.

Cephalata (sef-a-lá'ta) n. pl. [Gr kephalē, the head.] A division of mollusms which have a distinct head, with eyes, as the gastropoda, pteropoda, cuttle-fishes, otherwise called Cephalopoda.

Cephalate (sef-a-lá'te) n. A mollusc of the division Cephalata.

Cephalic (sef-a-lá'tik) a. [Gr kephalē, from kephalē the head.] Pertaining to the head, as, cephalic medicine, remedies for disorders in the head. Cephalic vein, the vein which runs along the arm, so named because the ancients used to open it for disorders of the head.

Cephalic (sef-a-lá'tik) n. A medicine for headache or other disorder in the head.

Cephalisation, Cephalization (sef-a-lá'ti-zé-shun) n. In bot. a term proposed by Professor Dana, of America, to denote a tendency in the development of animals towards a localisation of important parts in the neighbourhood of the head, as, by the transfer of locomotive members or limbs to the head (in the Cephalopoda, for example).

Cephalitis (sef-a-lá'tis) a. Pertaining to the head. [Rare.]

There is a crustacean, the cephalitis head-governer of molluscs.

Cephalitis (sef-a-lá'tis) n. [Gr kephalē, the head and itis, signifying inflammation.] Inflammation of the brain.

Cephalization n. See CEPHALISATION.

Cephalo-branchiate (sef-a-lá-brang'bi-lá'te) a. [Gr kephalē, the head, and branchia, gills.] In bot. a term applied to a section of the Amnoidia which have tufts of external gills placed on the head.

Cephalo-extractor (sef-a-lá-ek-strák'tér) n. An instrument to extract a tooth by clamping the head.

Cephalography (sef-a-lá-grá'fí) n. [Gr kephalē, the head, and graphē, description.] A description of the head. [Disused.]

Cephaloid (sef-a-lá'id) a. [Gr kephalē, head, and oides, form.] Shaped like the head, spherical.

Cephalology (sef-a-lá-ló-jí) n. [Gr kephalē, the head, and lógos, a discourse.] A treatise on the head.

Cephalopoda (sef-a-lá-lá'pá) n. See CEPHALOPODA.

Cephalometer (sef-a-lá-mé'tér) n. [Gr kephalē, the head, and metron, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the bustal length during parturition. E. H. Knight.

Cephalopora (sef-a-lá-lá'pá) n. pl. See CEPHALOPODA.

Cephalopoda (sef-a-lá-lá'pá) n. [Gr kephalē, the head, and poda, a foot.] An African genus of antelopes with short conical horns, not far back, large nostrils, and a crested crown, including the dayler bush or impress (C. ovatus), much hunted in South Africa. Its flesh makes capital soup, and the skin is cut into thongs for the long vague whip. Its height at the shoulder is about 11 inches. The rhinoceros, red-buck, or Natal bush-buck (C. nassimatus), and the blue-buck (C. pygmaeus) the former about 3 feet high, and the latter scarcely more than 1 foot, both South Africa, are members of this genus. Written also Cephalophus, and erroneously Cephalopus.

Cephalopod (sef-a-lá-lá'pá) n. pl. [Gr kephalē, the head, and poda, a foot.] A class of the mollusca, the highest in organization in that division of the animal kingdom, characterized by having the organs of prehension and locomotion, called tentacles or arms, attached to the head. They are divided into two sections, Tetrabranchiata and Dibranchiata. The nautilus and the fossil genera (Orthoceras, Ammonites, Goniatites &c. belong to the Tetrabranchiata, in which the animal has an external shell. The dibranchiata group includes the argonaut, the cuttlefish or eight armed cuttle fish, and the ten armed forms, as the calamaries, the fossil belemnites, &c. The shell is in all these internal in some rudimentary. The small Cephalopoda are multitudinous.

Cephalopodan (sef-a-lá-lá'pá) n. A mollusc of the class Cephalopoda.

Cephalopoda (sef-a-lá-lá'pá) n. pl. [Gr kephalē, the head, and poda, a foot.] A class of the mollusca, the highest in organization in that division of the animal kingdom, characterized by having the organs of prehension and locomotion, called tentacles or arms, attached to the head. They are divided into two sections, Tetrabranchiata and Dibranchiata. The nautilus and the fossil genera (Orthoceras, Ammonites, Goniatites &c. belong to the Tetrabranchiata, in which the animal has an external shell. of cartilaginous fishes, the type of the sub-family Cephalopodinae (which see).

Cephalopodaria (sef-a-lá-lá'pá) n. pl. [Gr kephalē, the head, poda, a foot, a wing, and oides, likeness.] A sub-family of cartilaginous fishes of the ray family, of which the genus Cephalopoda is the type, distinguished from all other rays by a pair of little fins which stand out from the head like horns. In some rays or horned rays. Only one species (C. Urolophus) has been found near the British coast. Some of the members of the family attain an almost incredible size, one having been taken at Messina weighing upwards of half a ton.

Cephalopoda (sef-a-lá-lá'pá) n. pl. [Gr kephalē, the head.] A genus given to a yellow elastic fatty substance, insoluble in alcohol, but soluble in ether which is obtained from the brain. According to some authorities it is a mixture of the carbonates of potassium and sodium, with traces of olein and oleo-phosphoric acid. Called also Cerebrin.

Cephalo-thorax (sef-a-lá-lá'thórak) n. [Gr kephalē, the head, and thorax, the thorax.] The anterior division of the body in crustaceans, spiders, scorpions, &c., which consists of the head and thorax blended together.

Cephalotome (sef-a-lá-lá'tóm) n. [Gr kephalē, the head, and tómē, cutting.] An instrument for cutting into the bustal head to examine the structure of the brain.

Cephalotomy (sef-a-lá-lá'tóm) n. 1 In bot. the dissection or opening of the head. — 2 In surgery the act or practice of operating with the cephalotome.

Cephalotrite (sef-a-lá-lá'trí) n. [Gr kephalē, the head, and trí, to bruise.] An obstetrical instrument for crushing the head of the infant in the womb in cases of difficult delivery. It consists of a strong forceps, with a powerful screw, by which the blades are forcibly pressed together so as to crush anything that is between them.

Cephalotus (sef-a-lá-lá'tús) n. [Gr kephalē, the head.] A genus of plants of a somewhat anomalous structure included in the natural order Malvaceae. Only one species is known, C. foliolosus (the Australian pitcher plant), a curious herb with radical leaves, some of which are elliptic and entire, but others are altered into pitchers with a thickened notched rim, closed with lids like the true pitcher plants (Nepenthes). The small white flowers are borne on a long spike. The generic name is due to the prominence of bearded hairs in the interior of the calyx.

Cephalus (sef-a-lá'us) a. Having a head, specifically, a term applied to the Cephalata, a division of mollusms including the nautilus.

Cephurus (sef-a-lá'us) n. [In classical myth the name of a king of Ethiopia, and husband of Canisope, placed among the stars after his death.] 1 In astronomy a constellation in the northern hemisphere, surrounded by Cassiopeia, Ursa Major, Draco, and Cygnus. It contains thirty five stars. — 2 One of the most wiles, family Crithidae.

Cepola (sef-a-lá'us) n. [L. dim. from capra, an onion, from its resemblance to the leaves of the plant.] A genus of fishes of the section Acanthopterygii. A species of this genus found on the British coast is known in England by the names of the red hand-fish and red snake fish.

Cepolidae (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. pl. [See CEPOLA.] Subgenus, hand fishes. A family of acanthopterygian fishes, characterized by an elongated and much compressed body, a very long dorsal fin often running the whole length of the back, the caudal fin when present being, however, always distinct from it, and by small cycloid scales. They are found, though not abundantly, in most seas, and some attain a large size, the Gymnastrus Shanhai, a British species, being sometimes 12 feet long. Also called Tenandrus.

Cepphis (sef-a-lá'us) n. [Gr kephalē, a light on a bird, metaphorically, a feather brained simpleton, a booby.] Very light, trifling. [Rare.]

Ceraceous (sef-a-lá'us) a. [L. ceraceus, waxy.] In bot. waxy a term applied to bodies which have the texture and colour of new wax, as the pollen masses of particular kinds of orchids.

Cera (sef-a-lá'us) n. [L. cera, wax.] Resinous, a substance consisting chiefly of the pollen of flowers, used by bees for aliment.

Cerata (sef-a-lá'us) n. [L. cera, wax.] A name given to that portion of bees' wax which is sparingly soluble in alcohol, and is not expellable by steam.

Cerambycidae (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. pl. [Gr kerambē, a horned beetle.] A family of coleopterous insects of the section Longicornia. They are common to all parts of the globe, but especially in hot climates. The most beautiful (Acronia maculata) belongs to this family.

Cerambyx (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. A Longicorn genus of coleopterous insects, including the milk-beetle, now subdivided into other genera. See CERAMBYCIDAE.

Ceramium (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. [L. ceramium, a jar or pitcher, from shape of the capsule.] The rose tangier, a natural order of cellular sea-weeds (Algae), consisting of thread like jointed plants of a red or brown red hue. The spores are in masses in transparent membranous sacs, and the tetraspores are external.

Ceramide (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. [Gr kerambē, from keramē, potter's clay, a piece of pottery.] Of or belonging to the Ceramide or pottery pertaining to the manufacture of porcelain and earthenware, as, the ceramic art.

Ceramidium (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. [Gr kerambē, a pitcher.] One of the conical or oval capsules of the Ceramium or rose-spored algae. They generally open by a terminal pore for the escape of the spores.

Ceraphron (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. [Gr keramē, a horn.] A genus of minute parasitic insects, family Proctotrupidae, some of which prey on insects destructive to plants. C. destructor lays its eggs in the pupae of the Hessian fly, which it destroys. It is calculated that not more than one in ten escapes the vigilance of these little enemies. C. destructor deposits its eggs in the female plant-lice.

Cerapus (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. [L. cera, wax, and pus, a foot.] The addis-shrimp, a genus of amphipodous crustaceans, which live in a tube, somewhat as the candle-worm among insects.

Cerasia (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. [L. cerasus, a cherry tree.] A kind of gum which exudes from the cherry and plum tree. It is distinguished from gum arabic by being insoluble in cold water.

Cerastium (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. 1 Pertaining to or containing cerasin. — 2 Cherry-colored deep red. [Rare.]

Cerato (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. [L. ceratus, a cherry.] 1 A cherry-like petrifaction. — 2 The saline muricite of land. [Rare.]

Cerastes (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. [Gr kerambē, the horned viper from heros, a horn.] A genus of African vipers, remarkable for their fatal venom, and for two little horns formed by the canals above the eyes. Hence they have received the name of horned vipers. The tail is very distinct from the body. C. cerastes is the horned viper of Northern Africa.

a species known to the ancients. There are several other species.

Cerastium (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. [From Gr. ceras, a horn, from the horn-shaped capsules of many of the species.] Monocotyledonous, a genus of plants, not order.

Ceraphyllum (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. [From Gr. ceras, a horn, and phyllon, a leaf.] A genus of plants, not order.

Ceraphyllum (sef-a-lá-lá'id) n. [From Gr. ceras, a horn, and phyllon, a leaf.] A genus of plants, not order.

perate and cold regions. Nine species are found in Britain.

Cherry (ser'-e-us), n. [L. a cherry-tree.] The cherry genus, a genus of hardy trees, nat. order Rosaceae, or rather a section of the genus Prunus, from which it is distinguished only by its leaves when young being folded instead of being rolled up. See CHERRY.

Cerata (ser'-at), n. [L. ceratum, from cera, wax.] A thick kind of element composed of wax, lard, or oil, with other ingredients, applied externally in various diseases.

Cerated (ser'-at-ed), a. [L. ceratus.] Covered with wax.

Ceratina (ser'-a-tin), a. [Gr. seratinos, the name of a nomenclatorial dilemma celebrated among ancient logicians, from seras, serates, a horn.] Sophistical, fallaciously subtle. [Rare.]

Ceratite (ser'-a-tit), n. A member of the genus Ceratites.

Ceratitis (ser'-a-tis), n. [Gr. seras, a horn.] A genus of fossil Ammonitidae, allied to the ammonites, in which the descending lobes terminate in a few small denticulations pointing upwards, the septa being plain. They are characteristic of the trias.

Ceratum (ser'-at-um), n. [Gr. keraton, dim. of keras, a horn.] In bot. a one-celled, many-seeded, superior linear fruit, differing from the silique or silicle in the lobes of the stigma being alternate with the placenta, not opposite.

Ceratobranchial (ser'-a-to-bran'-ki-al), n. [Gr. keras, brachia, a horn, and branchia, the gills.] A term applied to the lower of the two bony pieces which form the branchial arches in fishes.

Ceratocoele (ser'-a-to-sel), n. [Gr. keras, keratos, a horn, and koile, a tumour.] A term for a hernia of the cornea of the eye, consisting in a protrusion of the transparent cornea, or rather of the membrane of the aqueous humour, through an opening in the cornea.

Ceratodus (ser'-at-o-dus), n. [Gr. keras, keratos, a horn, and odus, tooth.] A fish in the Queensland rivers, allied to the lepidoderm. It is from 3 to 8 feet long, and the body is covered with large cycloid scales. The Ceratodus is the native 'salmon' or Barramunda of Australian rivers.

Cerato-glossus (ser'-a-to-glos'-us), n. [Gr. keras, keratos, a horn, and glossus, the tongue.] In anat. a muscle running from one of the cornua of the os-hyoideum to the tongue.

Cerato-hyal (ser'-a-to-hi-al), n. [Gr. keras, keratos, a horn, and hyalos, the hyoid bone.] In anat. pertaining to the lower and larger of the two principal parts of the cornua of the hyoid bone.

Ceratonia (ser'-a-to-ni-a), n. [L. ceratonia, horned, from Gr. seras, keras, a horn, from the horn-shaped pods.] A genus of plants, nat. order Leguminosae, remarkable from the flowers wanting the corolla. The only species is C. Siliqua (St. John's-bread or carob-tree), a native of the countries skirting the Mediterranean. The pods, often called locust-beans, are supposed by some to have been the food of St. John in the wilderness. They contain a sweet nutritious pulp, and are extensively used for feeding animals, and are sometimes seen in fruiters' shops.

Ceratophyllaceae (ser'-a-to-phi-l'-a-see), n. pl. [Gr. keras, keratos, a horn, and phyllon, a leaf.] A natural order of plants, containing a single genus with only one species, Ceratophyllum demersum (hornwort). It is a slender aquatic herb, with whorled, finely dissected rigid leaves, and small solitary monocious flowers, without calyx or corolla. It is common in pools or slow streams over a great part of the world.

Cerebration (ser'-a-brat-ion), n. Exertion or action of the brain, conscious or unconscious.

The principle of action was expounded by Dr. Carpenter under the designation of 'unconscious cerebration' in the fourth edition of his Human Physiology, published early in 1853—some months before any of the phenomena developed themselves to the satisfaction of which we now deem it applicable, and it has of late been frequently referred to under that name. The lectures of Sir W. Hamilton not having then been published, some but his own pupils were aware that the doctrine of 'unconscious cerebration' is really the same as that which had long previously been expounded by him as 'latent thought.'

Quart. Rev.

Cerebric (ser'-a-brik), a. Of or relating to the brain. —Cerebric acid, an acid extracted by ether from the brain, after it has been exposed to the action of boiling alcohol. When pure it is white, crystalline, and pulverisable.

Cerin, Cerine (sé-rín), n. [L. cerea, wax.] 1. A waxy substance which precipitates, on evaporation, from alcohol which has been digested on grated cork. — 2. The name given to that portion of bees' wax, amounting to 70 to 80 per cent of the whole, which is soluble in alcohol. According to Brodie this is merely impure cerotic acid. — 3. An ore of cerium, a variety of the mineral allanite.

Carinthian (sé-rín-thí-an), n. One of a sect of early heretics, so called from Carinthia, one of the first heresiarchs in the church. The Gospel of John was supposed to have been written against his system, which was a mixture of Judaism and Gnosticism.

Ceriph (sé-rí-f), n. In type-founding, one of the fine lines of a letter, especially one of the fine cross lines at the top or bottom, as of I.

Cerise (sé-réz), n. [Fr.; L. cerasus, a cherry.] Cherry-colour.

Cerise (sé-réz), a. Of the colour of cerise; cherry-coloured.

Cerite (sé-rít), n. A rare mineral, a hydrated silicate of cerium, of a pale rose-red colour, with a tinge of yellow, very hard, and of a dull resinous lustre, occurring only in an abandoned copper-mine at Riddarhytta, in Sweden. It is the chief source of cerium, and is the mineral from which that metal was first obtained. It contains also lanthanum and didymium.

Cerithium (sé-rí-thí-lí-dé), n. pl. Club-shells, a family of plant-eating gasteropodous molluscs containing numerous species, both marine and fresh-water, as well as many inhabiting brackish water. The shells are spiral, elongated, and often whorled and varicose. About 100 recent species are known, and 400 fossil, which range from the trias upwards, some species being especially characteristic of tertiary strata. The typical genus is Cerithium. Also written Cerithidae.

Cerithium (sé-rí-thí-lí-um), n. [Gr. kera, a horn, from their shape.] A genus of mollusca, the type of the family Cerithidae (which see).

Cerium (sé-rí-um), a. [From the planet Ceres] Byrn. Co. At. wt. 92; sp. gr. 5.5. A metal discovered in 1803 by Klaproth, Hisinger, and Berzelius independently. It is a powder of lamellar texture, malleable, of a colour between that of iron and that of lead, and acquires the metallic lustre by pressure, which becomes bright by polishing, but soon tarnishes in the air. It exists in the mineral cerite, in which it was first found, as also in allanite, gadolinite, and some others.

Cerni (sé-rní), Contracted for conserve. 'What cerni it you?' Shak.

Ceruous (sé-ré-us), a. [L. ceruus.] Drooping; pendulous: applied by botanists to flowers which are placed on curved peduncles, and so have the top curved downward. Erroneously written also Ceruous.

Cerograph (sé-ró-gráf), n. [L. cerea, wax, and Gr. grapho, to write.] A writing or engraving on wax, a painting in wax-colours; an encaustic painting.

Seven is my chance, and thyn is cink and treye. Chaucer.

2. A casual or fortuitous event; an accident. The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong; . . . but time and chance happeneth to them all. Eccles. ix. 11.

What chance is this? how is it I see you here? Tennyson.

3. [No pl.] That which is regarded as determining the course of events in the absence of law, ordinary causation, or providence; absence of assignable cause; accident; as, to meet a person by chance.

And by chance there came down a certain priest that way. Luke x. 31.

Against the threats
Of malice, or of sorcery, or that power
Which erring men call chance, this I hold firm;—
Virtue may be assailed, but never hurt. Milton.

4. What fortune may bring; success or misfortune; fortune. "If it be thy chance to kill me." Shak.

How will the country for these woful chances
Misthink the king. Shak.

Many a chance the years beget. Tennyson.

5. Possibility of an occurrence; opportunity.

I would set my life on any chance
To mend it or be rid on't. Shak.

Your ladyship may have a chance to escape this address. Swift.

— Theory or doctrine of chances. See under PROBABILITY.

Chance (chans), v.i. To happen; to fall out; to come or arrive without design or expectation.

Ah, Casca, tell us what hath chanced to-day. Shak.

To be wroth with one we love,
Doth work like madness on the brain.

And thus it chanced, as I divine,
With Roland and Sir Leoline. Coleridge.

This verb is sometimes used impersonally, as in the expression, 'how chances it.'

Sometimes the 'it' is omitted.

How chances it they travel? Shak.

How chance the king comes with so small a train? Shak.

Chance (chans), v.t. To put under the influence of chance; to risk; to hazard; as, the thing may be dangerous, but I will chance it.

Chancel (chan-sel), n. [So named from being raised off from the rest of the church by lattice-work L. cancelli. See CANCEL.]

1. That part of the choir of a church between the altar or communion table and the balustrade or railing that incloses it, or that part where the altar is placed; formerly inclosed with lattices or cross-bars, as now with rails. — 2. An inclosed space raised off in courts of judicature.

Chancellary (chan-sel-lā-ri), n. Same as Chancery.

Chancellor (chan-sel-er), n. [L. cancellarius, from L. cancelli, lattice-work, a lattice-work railing, the name being given on account of the chancellor formerly standing ad cancellos (at the latticed railing), to receive petitions of suitors, and acting as intermediaries between them and the judge.] Originally, a chief notary or scribe under the Roman emperors; but in England, in later times, an officer invested with judicial powers, and particularly with the superintendence of all charters, letters, and other official writings of the crown that require to be solemnly authenticated. Hence this officer became the keeper of the great seal. From the Roman Empire this office passed to the Church, and hence every bishop has his chancellor. In France, a secretary, particularly of an embassy, is, in some cases, called a chancellor. In the new German Empire the chancellor (Reichkanzler) is the president of the Federal Council, and has the general conduct of the imperial administration. In the United States, a chancellor is the judge of a court of chancery or equity, established by statute. In Scip. a master of the decrees, or president of the council.

Erra iv. 8. — The lord high chancellor of Great Britain, or keeper of the great seal, is the highest officer of the crown, and after the princes of the blood royal the first lay subject. He is a cabinet minister and privy councillor by his office, and prolocutor of the House of Lords by prescription. To him belongs the appointment of all justices of the peace; he is keeper of the sovereign's conscience, visitor of all hospitals and colleges founded by the king, guardian of all charitable uses, and judge of the High Court of Chancery. — Chancellor of a bishop or of a diocese, the vicar-general to the bishop, who holds his courts and directs and assists him in matters of ecclesiastical law. — Chancellor of a cathedral is an officer who arranges the celebration of religious services, hears lessons and lectures in the church, by himself or his vicar, applies the seal, writes letters of the chapter, keeps the books, &c.

— Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, an officer who presides either in person or by deputy in the court of the Duchy of Lancaster concerning all matters of equity, relating to lands holden of the king (queen) in right of the Duchy of Lancaster. — Chancellor of the exchequer, the highest finance minister of the British government. This office is, from its nature, intrusted to a commoner.

It is sometimes held along with that of first lord of the treasury, the latter title always being that of the premier. The chancellor of the exchequer was formerly a judge ex officio in the equity department of the Court of Exchequer, taking precedence of all the barons, but when the equitable jurisdiction of this court was transferred by 1 Vict. v. to the Court of Chancery, his judicial functions became obsolete. — Chancellor of a jury, in Scotland, is the process or foreman of the jury, who announces the verdict when it is a verbal one, and who delivers it in, and along with the clerk subscribes it in the name of the jury, when it is in writing.

— Chancellor of the order of the Garter, and other military orders, is an officer who seals the commissions and mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their proceedings, and delivers their acts under the seal of their order.

Chancellor of a university, the highest honorary official in the university, from whom the degrees are regarded as proceeding. The post in this country is usually occupied by a nobleman or other person of rank.

Chancellorship (chan-sel-er-ship), n. The office of a chancellor; the time during which one is chancellor.

Chancel-screen (chan-sel-skreen), n. The screen or railing separating the chancel from the body of the church. It is often richly carved and adorned.

Chancel-table (chan-sel-tā-bl), n. An altar or communion table.

Chance-medley (chans-med-li), n. [From chance, and medley; O. Fr. meslee, a fray, a melee or medley; not the same as chaud-medley.] 1. In law, originally a term signifying a casual affray or riot, accompanied with violence, and without deliberate or pre-conceived malice, but applied at present to a particular kind of homicide, viz., the killing of another in self-defence, upon a sudden and unpremeditated encounter. — 2. A haphazard mixture. Milton.

Chancery (chan-se-ri), n. [Modified from older chancery, from Fr. chancellerie, L. cancellaria, from cancelli, lattice-work. See CANCELLOR.] 1. In England, formerly the highest court of justice next to parliament, but since 1873 a division of the High Court of Justice, which is itself one of the two departments of the Supreme Court of Judicature. It formerly consisted of two distinct tribunals: one ordinary, being a court of common law; the other extraordinary, being a court of equity. The ordinary legal jurisdiction of chancery embraced the issuing of writs for a new parliament; of pleas of scire facias to repeal letters-patent, and of all original writs. It issued writs of habeas corpus, and inquired into charitable uses, while the lord-chancellor (the president of the court), together with the lords-justices of appeal, had exclusive authority over the property and persons of idiots and lunatics. Appeals in bankruptcy were heard by the court of appeal in chancery. The extraordinary court, or court of equity, proceeded upon rules of equity and conscience, moderated the rigour of the common law, giving relief in cases where there was no remedy in the common-law courts. The court of appeal in chancery no longer exists, its functions being transferred to the court of appeal; and the jurisdiction in respect of lunatics is vested in such judges of the High Court of Justice or the court of appeal as the crown may appoint.

2. In Scotland, an office in the general register-house of Edinburgh, managed by the director of chancery and his deputies. In it are recorded charters, patents of dignity, gifts of office, remissions, legitimations, and all other writs appointed to pass the great or the quarter seal. All writs passing through chancery are recorded before they are given out to be sealed. Called also Chancery. 3. In the United States, a court of equity.—Inns of chancery. See INN.

Chancrous (shang'k'rus), a. Having the qualities of a chancre; ulcerous.

Chancy (chan's), a. Lucky. [Scotch.]

Chandeller (shan-de-lér), n. [Fr. chandelier, a chandelier, and also a chandier, or dealer in candles, from L. candela, a candle. See CANDLE.] 1. A stand with branches to hold a number of candles, to light up a room.—2. In fort, a movable parapet, serving to support fascines to cover pioneers.

Chandler (chand'ler), n. [Really the same word as chandeller (which see), but with a slightly different form. The term tallow-chandler would originally signify a person who sold candles made of tallow, as opposed to those made of wax, but the real meaning of chandler being lost it was supposed to mean dealer.] 1. One who makes or sells candles.

The chandler's basket, on his shoulder borne,
With tallow spots thy coat. Gay.

2. A dealer in general; the particular meaning of the term being determined by a prefix; as, tallow-chandler; ship-chandler, &c.

Chasuble (châ'su-bl), n. (Fr. chasuble, from its Latin name of casula, the chasuble was a circular garment of one piece, without sleeves or opening in front, with a hole in the centre for the head to pass through, of various materials, frequently of wool, worn by the common people, monks, &c., as a covering for the whole person, being, when furnished with a hood, at once hat and mantle. From its being retained by the clergy after other people had discarded it, it came to be regarded as a characteristic of a cleric, and in the ninth century it was the term applied to the outer vestment worn in the holy offices, and it is now regarded as the principal vestment of the Roman Catholic priest, being put on by him over the alb and stole before celebrating mass. Although the vestment was originally circular, it has been gradually retrenched during the last two centuries till it has become oblong, hanging down before and behind, but leaving the arms free. The chasuble is now made of rich materials, as silk, velvet, cloth of gold, and has a cross embroidered on the back. The Greeks still retain the circular form of the chasuble. Called also Chasuble and Chasuble.

The curd or curd of milk, coagulated by rennet or some acid, separated from the serum or whey, and pressed in a vat, hoop, or mould. All the acids separate the cheese from the whey; neutral salts, and likewise all earthy and metallic salts, produce the same effect. But what answers best is rennet, which is made by macerating in water a piece of the last stomach of a calf, milked and dried for this purpose. The flowers of the Galium verum, or yellow lady's bed-straw, and the juice of the fig-tree very readily coagulate milk. There are a great many kinds of cheese, which differ from one another according to the quality of the milk employed and the mode of preparation. Soft cheeses, such as cream-cheese, Bath and Yorkshire cheese, will not keep long, and are therefore used as soon as made. Hard cheeses, as Cheshire, Gloucester, Cheddar, Parmesan, and Dutch, are capable of being kept a long time. There is also an intermediate class, as Gray's, Stilton, &c. Cheese is composed of from 30 to 50 per cent of water, 5 to 6 per cent of nitrogen, 18 to 30 per cent of fat, and 4 to 6 per cent of mineral matter.—2. A mass of pomace or ground apples pressed together in the form of a cheese.—3. [Slang.] Anything good or first-rate in quality; anything genuine, advantageous, or pleasant. In this sense probably from the Gypsy vocabulary, and derived from Hindu and Persian chêz, a thing. Leland, however, while acknowledging it to be a true Gypsy word, refers it rather to French chose, a thing, which is from Latin causa.

Cheese-cake (chêz'kâk), n. 1. A cake filled with a jelly made of soft curds, sugar, and butter.—2. A small cake made in various ways and with a variety of different ingredients; as, lemon cheese-cake, orange cheese-cake, apple cheese-cake, &c.

Cheese-fat (chêz'fat), n. [Corruption for cheese-vat.] Cheese-mould. Sir W. Scott.

Cheese-fly (chêz'flî), n. A small black dipterous insect bred in cheese, the Piophilæ casei, of the family Muscidae, the same to which the house-fly, blow-fly, &c., belong. It has a very a, Maggot extended, extensible ovipositor; b, c, In leaping position, which it can sink to a, d, e, Fly (nat. size).

Cheese-hopper (P. casei), n. A maggot extended, which it can sink to a, d, e, Fly (nat. size).

Cheese-mould (chêz'môld), n. A mould or form in which cheese is pressed.

Cheese-pale (chêz'pâl), n. A sharp instrument of a semicircular concave form, like a small scoop, for piercing cheese, so as to enable it to be tasted without cutting. Called also Cheese-scoop and Cheese-taster.

Cheese-paring (chêz'pâr-ing), n. 1. A paring of the rind of cheese.—2. Parsimony.

Cheese-paring (chêz'pâr-ing), a. Meanly economical; parsimonious; as, cheese-paring economy.

Cheese-press (chêz'pres), n. A press or apparatus for pressing curd in the making of cheese.

Cheese-rennet (chêz'ren-net), n. A name given to the yellow lady's bed-straw (Galium verum), used for coagulating milk. See CHEESE.

Cheese-room (chêz'rûm), n. A local English name for the horse-mushroom (Aporrhiza arvensis), extensively used as an article of food.

Cheese-scoop, Cheese-taster (chêz'skûp, chêz'tâst-ér), n. Same as Cheese-pale.

Cheese-vat (chêz'vât), n. The vat or case in which curds are confined for pressing.

Cheesiness (chêz'i-nes), n. The quality of being cheery or resembling cheese in consistency.

Cheery (chêr'i), a. Having the nature, qualities, taste, odour, or form of cheese; resembling cheese in any respect; caseous. 'A cheery substance.' A. R. Wallace.

Chet (chê), v.t. [Imitative.] To chatter or chirrup.

Chetah, Chetsa (chê'ta), n. Same as Chet.

Chief (chêf), n. [Fr.] 1. Head or chief; specifically, the head cook of a great establishment, as a nobleman's household, a club, &c. Thackeray.—2. In her, chef or chefs is often used for chef.

Chief-d'œuvre (chêf-dû-vr), n. pl. Chêfs-d'œuvre (chêf-dû-vr), [Fr.] A master-piece; a fine work in art, literature, &c.

Cheque, Cheque (chêq, chêq'r), n. Same as Chèque.

Chel, Chil. The initial part of sundry compound words from Gr. cheilos, a lip. In this, and in other components and words derived from the Greek, as in cheir, hand, cheim, terrible, pleion, more, meton, less, the diphthong ch is often replaced by c, as in cheilognathia, cheiloptera, cheimonia, pleiocene, for cheilognathia, cheiloptera, cheimonia, pleiocene, &c.

Chelanthus (kêl-an-thûs), n. [Gr. cheilos, a lip, and anthos, a flower, in allusion to the form of the indusium.] A genus of poly-podiaceous ferns, some species of which are much cultivated because the under surface of the fronds is covered with a silver or gold powder. The genus is distinguished by the small sori at the ends of the free veins, and covered by the bent-over margin of the frond.

Chelognathia (kêl-og-na-thîa), n. pl. [Gr. cheilos, a lip, and gnathos, a jaw.] An order of myriapoda, represented by the hairy worms or millipeda, in which the two mandibles and the tongue are united to form a large lower lip.

Cheloplasty (kêl-ô-plas-tî), n. [Gr. cheilos, the lip, and plastis, to form, to mould.] In surgery, the term for the operation of supplying deficiencies of the lip, by appropriating a sufficient quantity of the healthy surrounding surface.

Chelopod (kêl-ô-pod), n. An insect of the order Chelipoda.

Chelopoda (kêl-ô-pô-da), n. pl. [Gr. cheilos, a lip, and pous, podos, a foot.] One of the two orders of Myriapoda, represented by the centipeda, in which a pair of mandibles, or large jaws with small palpi, two pairs of dibles, which it uses both for digging into the cheese and for moving itself, having no feet. It has two pairs of spiracles, one pair near the head and another near the tail, so that when one is obstructed the other can be used. Its leaps are performed by a jerk, first bringing itself into a circular attitude, when it can project itself twenty to thirty times its own length.

Cheese-hopper (chêr'hop-ér). See CHEESE-FLY.

Cheese-lap (chêr'lep), n. A bag in which rennet for cheese is kept.

Cheese-mite (chêr'mit), n. A mite or arachnid of the genus Acarus (A. domesticus), which infests cheese.

Cheesemonger (chêz'mung-gér), n. One who deals in or sells cheese.

Cheese-mould (chêz'môld), n. A mould or form in which cheese is pressed.

Cheese-pale (chêz'pâl), n. A sharp instrument of a semicircular concave form, like a small scoop, for piercing cheese, so as to enable it to be tasted without cutting. Called also Cheese-scoop and Cheese-taster.

Cheese-paring (chêz'pâr-ing), n. 1. A paring of the rind of cheese.—2. Parsimony.

Cheese-paring (chêz'pâr-ing), a. Meanly economical; parsimonious; as, cheese-paring economy.

Cheese-press (chêz'pres), n. A press or apparatus for pressing curd in the making of cheese.

Cheese-rennet (chêz'ren-net), n. A name given to the yellow lady's bed-straw (Galium verum), used for coagulating milk. See CHEESE.

Cheese-room (chêz'rûm), n. A local English name for the horse-mushroom (Aporrhiza arvensis), extensively used as an article of food.

Cheese-scoop, Cheese-taster (chêz'skûp, chêz'tâst-ér), n. Same as Cheese-pale.

Cheese-vat (chêz'vât), n. The vat or case in which curds are confined for pressing.

Cheesiness (chêz'i-nes), n. The quality of being cheery or resembling cheese in consistency.

Cheery (chêr'i), a. Having the nature, qualities, taste, odour, or form of cheese; resembling cheese in any respect; caseous. 'A cheery substance.' A. R. Wallace.

Chet (chê), v.t. [Imitative.] To chatter or chirrup.

Chetah, Chetsa (chê'ta), n. Same as Chet.

Chief (chêf), n. [Fr.] 1. Head or chief; specifically, the head cook of a great establishment, as a nobleman's household, a club, &c. Thackeray.—2. In her, chef or chefs is often used for chef.

Chief-d'œuvre (chêf-dû-vr), n. pl. Chêfs-d'œuvre (chêf-dû-vr), [Fr.] A master-piece; a fine work in art, literature, &c.

Cheque, Cheque (chêq, chêq'r), n. Same as Chèque.

Chel, Chil. The initial part of sundry compound words from Gr. cheilos, a lip. In this, and in other components and words derived from the Greek, as in cheir, hand, cheim, terrible, pleion, more, meton, less, the diphthong ch is often replaced by c, as in cheilognathia, cheiloptera, cheimonia, pleiocene, for cheilognathia, cheiloptera, cheimonia, pleiocene, &c.

Chelanthus (kêl-an-thûs), n. [Gr. cheilos, a lip, and anthos, a flower, in allusion to the form of the indusium.] A genus of poly-podiaceous ferns, some species of which are much cultivated because the under surface of the fronds is covered with a silver or gold powder. The genus is distinguished by the small sori at the ends of the free veins, and covered by the bent-over margin of the frond.

Chelognathia (kêl-og-na-thîa), n. pl. [Gr. cheilos, a lip, and gnathos, a jaw.] An order of myriapoda, represented by the hairy worms or millipeda, in which the two mandibles and the tongue are united to form a large lower lip.

Cheloplasty (kêl-ô-plas-tî), n. [Gr. cheilos, the lip, and plastis, to form, to mould.] In surgery, the term for the operation of supplying deficiencies of the lip, by appropriating a sufficient quantity of the healthy surrounding surface.

Chelopod (kêl-ô-pod), n. An insect of the order Chelipoda.

Chelopoda (kêl-ô-pô-da), n. pl. [Gr. cheilos, a lip, and pous, podos, a foot.] One of the two orders of Myriapoda, represented by the centipeda, in which a pair of mandibles, or large jaws with small palpi, two pairs of maxillipeds or foot-jaws, and a lower lip, are developed.

Cheilostomata (ki-lô-stô-m'a-ta), n. pl. [Gr. cheilos, a lip, and stoma, mouth.] A sub-order of funnel-shaped (infundibulate) marine Polyzoa, characterized by having the orifice of the cell filled with a thin membranous or calcareous plate, and a curved mouth furnished with a movable lip.

Cheilostomatous (ki-lô-stô-m'a-tus), a. Of or pertaining to the sub-order Cheilostomata, having the mouth furnished with a movable lip.

Cheir-, Chir-, See CHEIL-, CHIL-.
Cheiracanthus (ki-ra-kân'thus), n. [Gr. cheir, the hand, and akantha, a thorn.] 1. A fossil ganoid fish of the Devonian or old red system, covered with small brightly enamelled scales, and having all its fins armed with defensive spines. It abounds at Gamrie, Banffshire. 2. See GNATHOSTOMA.

Cheiranthus (ki-rân'thus), n. [Gr. cheir, the hand, and anthos, a flower.] A genus of plants, nat. order Cracifera, consisting of pubescent herbs or small shrubs with large yellow or purple sweet-scented flowers. The wall-flower (C. Cheiri) is the best known species.

Cheirognomy (ki-ro-gno-mi), n. Same as Chirognomy.

Cheirolepis (ki-ro-le-pis), n. [Gr. cheir, the hand, and lepis, a scale.] A genus of fossil ganoid fishes found in the old red sandstone of Orkney and Morayshire, with very minute scales, belonging to the family Acanthodes, or spine-finned fishes, and characterized by the great development of the pectoral and ventral fins.

Cheirology (ki-ro-lo-jî), n. Same as Chirology.

Cheironomys (ki-rô-mis), n. [Gr. cheir, the hand, and mys, a mouse.] A genus of lemurine quadrupeds, consisting of the single species C. madagascariensis (the aye-aye).

Cheironectes (ki-rô-nek'téz), n. [Gr. cheir, the hand, and nectô, to swim.] 1. A genus of acanthopterygious fishes, having the pectoral fins supported, like short feet, upon peduncles, by means of which they are enabled to creep over mud and sand when left dry by the receding tide, and also to take short leaps like a frog, whence it is called frog-fish, as well as hand-fish. They are found in the estuaries of the north-east of Australia. From the structure of their gills they can live out of the water for two or three days. 2. The name given by Illiger to a Brazilian genus of opossums, in which the hinder-hands are webbed. Only one species is known, namely, C. variegatus, or C. Yapock (sometimes called the Yapock opossum, from the river of that name), a spotted marsupial quadruped, found in some parts of South America.

Cheiropodist (ki-ro-pod-ist), n. Same as Chiropodist.

Cheiropter (ki-ro-p'tér), n. A mammal of the order Chiroptera.

Cheiroptera (ki-ro-p'tér-a), n. pl. [Gr. cheir, the hand, and pteron, wing.] An order of mammals—the bats—nearly equivalent to the Linnæan genus Vesperugo. They are characterized by the elongation of all the fingers, save the thumb, for the support of a membrane which stretches along the sides of the body, and is attached to the posterior limbs, in the majority passing across between the hind limbs and tail. They have thus the power of sustained flight. See BAT.

Cheiropterus (ki-ro-p'tér-us), a. Belonging to the Chiroptera or bat tribe; furnished with elongated fingers or toes, for the expansion of membranes which serve as wings.

Cheirostemon (ki-rô-stê-mon), n. [Gr. cheir, the hand, and stemon, a stamen.] A genus of plants, nat. order Malvaceæ or Sterculiaceæ. It contains a single species, C. plantanoides (the hand-flower tree of Mexico). It is a tall tree with large lobed leaves and remarkable flowers, about 2 inches across, without a corolla, but with a coloured calyx, and the bright red stamens divided for about one-third of their length into five linear curved lobes, having some resemblance to the human hand.

Chelotes (ki-rô-téz), n. [Gr. cheirotes, provided with hands, from cheir, a hand.] A genus of lizards forming the family Cheloniidae, and containing but one species, C. asculatus, an animal, so far as known, of subterranean habits like the amphibians. It, however, differs from the other members of the order Amphibania in having external limbs, which consist of two small and slightly developed fore-legs, just behind the head, nearly in the place where the ears might be expected. It is about the thickness of a human little finger, and from 8 to 10 inches long.

Chelotherium (ki-rô-thê-ri-um), n. [Gr. cheir, the hand, and thêrion, a wild beast.] Lk. hand-beast; in geol. a name given to the great unknown animal that formed the larger footstep upon the slabs of the trias, or upper new red sandstone, and which bear a resemblance to the human hand. It is supposed to be identical with the new-like labyrinthodon.

Chelaton, n. A kind of rich cloth. See CHECKLTON.

Cheko-mate, n. Same as Check-mate. Chaucer.

Chekere, n. Same as Checker. Chaucer.
Chekmak (chek'mak), n. A Turkish fabric of mixed silk and cotton, with golden threads interwoven.

Chekoa (chê-kô-a), n. Chinese porcelain clay.

Chela (kê-la), n. pl. Chelæ (kê-lê), n. pl. Chelæ, a claw. One of the prehensile claws with which some of the limbs are terminated in certain crustacea, such as the crab, lobster, &c.

Chelate (kê-lât), a. Same as Cheliferous.

Chelaundra, n. [Fr. calandre, It. calandra.] A kind of lark; the calandra. Ro-mant of the Rose.

Chela, n. Chill; cold. 'In many a chela and heat.' Gower.

Chelo (kê-lô), n. Same as Chela.

Chelocera (kê-lis'ér-ê), n. pl. Chelocera (kê-lis'ér-ê), [Gr. chêlê, a claw, and keras, a horn.] A name given to the prehensile claws of the scorpion and spider, which are the homologues of antennæ.

Chelidide, Chelydide (kê-lid'ê-dê), n. pl. [Gr. chelys, a tortoise, and eidô, resemblance.] A family of tortoises (sometimes called frog-tortoises), agreeing generally in their form and the structure of their feet with the marsh-tortoises, except that the carapace is imperfectly ossified, and the head and limbs are not completely retractile. The mouth is surrounded by soft lips, and the nose usually elongated into a proboscis.
Chelidonium (kel'î-dô-ni-um), n. [Gr. chêlidôn, from chêlêdôn, a swallow.] Celandine, a genus of plants, nat. order Papaveraceæ. One of the two known species is a native of waste grounds in the south of England (C. majus). It is a glaucous annual, with lobed leaves, small yellow flowers, and a long pod. It abounds in an acrid yellow juice, sometimes used as a caustic to destroy warts.

Chelifer (kel'î-fér), n. [Gr. chêlê, a claw, and î-fero, to carry.] A genus of Arachnide, remarkable for the resemblance which the species bear to scorpions. See BOOK-SCORPION.

Cheliferous (kê-lif'ér-us), a. [Gr. chêlê, a claw, and î-fero, to bear.] Furnished with chelæ, as a lobster, a crab, &c.

Cheliform (kel'î-form), a. [L. chela, a claw, and forma, form.] Having the form of a chela or prehensile claw, like those of the lobster, crab, &c.

Chelingus (she-ling), n. A clumsy kind of boat used on the coast of Coromandel. Called also Maecola-boat (which see).

Chelodine (kel'ô-din), n. [Gr. chelys, a tortoise.] An Australian river tortoise, having a long, flexible neck, and a flat, narrow, and pointed head. It is a very active animal, traversing with considerable speed the pools and rivers in which it finds its fishy prey.

Cheloid (kel'oid), n. [Gr. chelys, a tortoise, and eidô, appearance.] Same as Canceroid. Dungliana.

Chelone (kê-lô-nê), n. [Gr. chêlônê, a tortoise.] 1. In bot. a beautiful genus of herbaceous plants, nat. order Scrophulariaceæ. The broad keeled upper lip and nearly shut mouth of the corolla suggested the name. The species are perennials, with large white or purple flowers. They are natives of America, but are frequent in our gardens. They are popularly called tortoise-flower, shell-flower and snake-head. 2. In zool. a genus of turtles, family Cheloniidae, represented by the green turtle (Chelone mydas or viridis).

Chelonina (kê-lô-ni-a), n. pl. [Gr. chêlônê, a tortoise.] An order of reptiles, distinguished by the body being inclosed in a double shell, out of which the head, tail, and four extremities protrude, including the various species of tortoise and turtle. The order is divided into five families—the Chelidide, or frog tortoises; Testudinide, or land tortoises; Emydæ, the terrapins or fresh-water tortoises; Trionychide, the mud turtles or soft tortoises; Cheloniide, or sea turtles. See TORTOISE, TURTLE.

Chelonian (kê-lô-ni-an), a. [Gr. chêlônê, a tortoise.] Pertaining to or designating animals of the tortoise kind.

Chelonian (kê-lô-ni-an), n. A member of the order Chelonina.

Chelonide, Cheloniide (kê-lôn'î-dê, kê-lô-ni'î-dê), n. pl. [Gr. chêlônê, a tortoise, and eidô, resemblance.] A family of chelonian reptiles, distinguished by the peculiar modification of the feet for swimming; the turtles. See TURTLE.

Cheluride (kê-lûr'î-dê), n. pl. [Gr. chêlê, a claw, oura, a tail, and eidô, resemblance.] The wood-boring shrimps, a family of marine shrimps nearly as destructive to timber as the ship-worm itself by boring tunnels under the surface.

Chelydide. See CHELIDIDE.

Chelys (kê-lis), n. [Gr. a tortoise.] A genus of turtles, type of the family Chelidide. See MATAMATA.

Chemic (kem'ik), n. 1. A chemist or alchemist. 2. In bleaching, a dilute solution of chloride of lime.

Chemic (kem'ik), v. t. pret. & pp. chemicked; ppr. chemicking. In bleaching, to steep, as cotton goods, in a dilute solution of chloride of lime in stone vats, the liquor being pumped up and strained through the goods until the action is complete.

Chemic (kem'ik), a. Same as Chemical, but used chiefly in poetry.

Chemical (kem'ik-al), a. [See CHEMISTRY.] 1. Pertaining to chemistry; as, a chemical experiment. 2. Pertaining to the phenomena with which chemistry deals and to the laws by which they are regulated; as, chemical affinity; chemical combinations; chemical changes. — Chemical affinity, chemical attraction, and electric attraction, are different names for that action by which the particles of one class of bodies, when presented to those of certain other classes, conjoin to form new compounds, making apparently a choice or election of those with which they unite. Chemical attraction, like cohesion, acts only at insensible distances, and thus differs entirely from the attraction of gravitation. It is distinguished from cohesion by being exerted between dissimilar particles only, while cohesion unites similar particles only. Chemical combination always takes place in definite proportions, that is, each element has a certain definite combining proportion, whereas mere mixture or solution may occur with very varying amounts of the same substances, the properties of the product or products of chemical action are not the mean of the properties of the substances acted upon, as is the case with mere mechanical actions; and, further, chemical action is always attended with alteration in the temperature of the substances acted on, in the form of an evolution of heat. Chemical action may take place between two elements whereby a new compound is produced, or it may cause the decomposition of a compound into two or more elementary bodies; or again, two compounds may react on one another, and by an interchange of elements produce a series of new compounds. The power of chemical force is very great, and it varies under different circumstances; thus, the force with which two bodies, say A and B, unite, is much greater than that with which A unites with a third body under the same circumstances, but the circumstances under which combination takes place often alters entirely the relative magnitude or strength of the chemical action. — Chemical analysis, a term applied to the resolution of compound bodies into their elements. It is either qualitative or quantitative. Qualitative analysis consists in the determination of the component parts merely as respects their nature, and without regard to their relative proportions. Quantitative analysis consists in the determination not merely of the components of a compound, but their relative proportions. — Chemical combination, that intimate union of two substances, whether fluid or solid, which forms a compound differing in one or more of its essential qualities from either of the constituent bodies. — Chemical decomposition, the separation of the component parts of bodies from each other, or the resolution of compounds into their elements. See DISCOMPOSITION.

Chemical equivalents. See EQUIVALENCY. — Chemical formulae, symbolic expressions employed to denote the composition of bodies. In the formulae now generally adopted by chemists the names of elementary substances are indicated by the first letter or letters of their names, and to express the compounds of these the letters are arranged together, and small numbers are placed at each letter to indicate how many atoms or smaller combining parts of this element exist in the compound. Thus, H means 1 atom of hydrogen, H₂O means 2 atoms of hydrogen united with 1 of oxygen, forming the compound water, K₂HO means 1 atom of potassium (kalium), 1 of hydrogen, and 1 of oxygen, forming the compound caustic potash, and so on. If a number is placed at the beginning of the formula it multiplies the entire formula, thus, 2 H₂O means 2 parts or 2 molecules of water. See ATOM and MOLECULE. See also Mechanism, Chemical. See also MECHANICAL.

Chemical (kem'ik al), a. A substance used to produce chemical effects, a chemical agent, as, the manufacture of chemicals.

Chemically (kem'ik al i), adv. In a chemical manner, according to chemical principles, by chemical process or operation.

Chemistry (kem'is t'ri), n. [Or chemia, in chemistry, and physica, to govern.] A term applied to anything engraved by the agency of the galvanic battery.

Chemise (she-mis'), n. [Fr chemise, L.L. camisia, a shirt, from Ar gami, a shirt, an under-garment of linen.] 1. A shirt or under-garment worn by females. — 2. A wall that lines the face of an earthwork, a breast-work.

Chemisee (she-mis'et'), n. [Fr A] A short under-garment worn on the breast over the chemise.

Chemism (kem'izm), n. Chemical power, influence, or effects. [Rare.]

How far their ready ignition on amorphous phosphorus is due to chemism or to electricity remains to be proved.

Chemist (kem'ist), n. [Shortened from alchemist See CHEMISTRY.] 1. An alchemist. 2. A person versed in chemistry, a student of chemistry, one whose business is to make chemical examinations or investigations. — 3. One who deals in drugs and medicines. — Chemist and druggist, one who is registered as such under the act of July 31, 1890 relating to the sale of poisons. Chemists and druggists are eligible as members of the Pharmaceutical Society, but are not entitled to a place on the register as pharmaceutical chemists. — Pharmaceutical chemist, a person who, after passing a certain examination, is registered as such by the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain. Applicants for the title are tested by competent examiners of the society in Latin, botany, materia medica, and pharmaceutical and general chemistry, with other cognate subjects, but not including medicine, surgery, or midwifery.

Chemistral (kem'is-tral), a. Relating to Chemistry. [Rare.]

Chemistry (kem'is-tri), n. [From chemist, a shortened form of alchemist, from alchemy, alchymy, O Fr alchimie from Ar al, the, and gim, chemistry, from Gr cheim, to pour, to drop.] The science which investigates matter in so far as it is acted upon by the forces called chemical, the distinguishing feature of chemical action being the production of a substance or substances of quite different properties from the bodies from which they are produced. In then studying the changes which matter undergoes the chemist arrives at a classification of all matter into elements, that is, substances which he is unable to decompose, and compounds, or substances which can be broken up into simpler bodies. It becomes necessary, therefore, for the chemist to study the properties, modes of preparation, and mutual actions of both elements and compounds, and he must not overlook the relations of these bodies to physical forces other than chemical, such as heat, light, &c. A consideration of the laws which govern chemical actions, and of the bearing of these upon the general theories of matter constitutes theoretical (or pure) chemistry, while practical (or applied) chemistry is more concerned with the modes of preparing chemical substances, of analyzing these, or of finding useful applications for such substances in the arts and manufactures. Chemistry also is often divided into such branches as organic chemistry, which has to do with organized bodies (animals and plants), inorganic chemistry, with inorganic bodies, agricultural chemistry, medical chemistry, &c. Chemistry is subservient to the various arts of life, and the several branches of manufacture which are carried on in every civilized state. Dyeing, bleaching, tanning, glass-making, the working and composition of metals, &c., are all chemical processes, and, as a science, chemistry is connected with a vast number of the phenomena of nature. It has been called in to the aid of the culinary arts, and its high importance in medicine has been long and universally acknowledged. Formerly and still sometimes written Chymistry. The same is the case also with Chymist, Chymical.

Chemotype, Chemotypy (kem'tip, kem'ti-p), n. [Chem in chemistry and type.] A process for obtaining casts in relief from engravings. A polished zinc plate is covered with an etching ground, on which the design is etched with a point and bitten in with dilute aqua fortis. The etching ground is removed, and every particle of the acid well cleaned off. The plate, covered by the filings of a fusible metal, is heated until the metal has melted and filled the engraving. When cold it is scraped away to the level of the zinc plate in such a manner that none of it remains except what has entered the engraved lines. The plate is next submitted to the action of a weak solution of muriatic acid; and, as the one of these metals is negative and the other positive, the zinc alone is eaten away by the acid, so that the fusible metal which has entered into the hollows of the engraving is left in relief, and may be printed from by means of the typographic press. Chemotype is particularly adapted for producing maps. Chemosis (kem'osis), n. [Gr chem, an aperture, from the appearance produced in the eye by this affection.] An of the eye in which the retina is elevated transparent cornea.

Chemistry (kem'is t'ri), n. Chemistry. See CHEMISTRY.

Cheng (ch'eng), n. A Chinese instrument, consisting of a series of tubes having free reeds. It is held in the hand and blown into by the mouth. The tubes serve only to strengthen the sound, and could be dispensed with, the pitch of the sounds being determined by the length and thickness of the reeds. The introduction of this instrument into Europe led to the invention of the accordion, harmonium, and other free-reed instruments.

Cheng (ch'eng), n. Carl Engel's Musical Instruments.

Chenille (she-nil'), n. [Fr, a caterpillar.] A tufted cord of silk or worsted, somewhat resembling a caterpillar, used for making hair nets, &c.

Cherry (che'ri), n. [O.E. cheri, chiri, from Fr. cerasus, L. cerasus, a cherry from Gr. kerasos, a cherry. 'Cheri or chiri' was a corruption of cheris or chiris, the final s being mistaken for the plural inflection; the same mistake occurs in several other words, notably in pea as shortened from pease (L. pismus).] Shak. That the tree received its name from the town of Cerasus in Pontus is very doubtful; possibly the derivation was the other way.] 1. The fruit of species of Cerasus, which is commonly regarded as a sub-genus of Prunus; a tree producing this fruit. The cultivated varieties probably belong to two species, C. avium and C. vulgaris. They are numerous, as the red or garden cherry, the red heart, the white heart, the black cherry, the black heart, and several others. The fruit is a pulpy drupe inclosing a one-seeded smooth stone. It is related that this fruit or a cultivated variety of it was brought from Cerasus in Pontus to Italy after the defeat of Mithridates by Lucullus, about a.c. 70, and introduced into England by the Romans about 150 years afterward, A.D. 55.—Barbados cherry is the fruit of Malpighia urens. The berries are red, cherry-shaped, acid, and eatable.—Bird cherry is Prunus Padus.—Cornelian cherry is the fruit of Cornus mas-cula (cornel-tree or dog-wood). It is a small, acid, cherry-like eatable berry.—Dwarf cherry is the fruit of a Lonicera or honey-suckle.—Hottentot cherry is the fruit of Cassine Maurococcia. The fruit is a tripartite berry of a dark purple colour.—Mahaleb cherry, the fruit of Cerasus Mahaleb, of the south of Europe.—Marasca cherry, See MARASCA.—Winter cherry is the fruit of Rhamnus Alaternus. It is a berry of the size of a small cherry, inclosed in an inflated bladder-like calyx. This name is also given to a species of Solanum.—2. A cordial composed of cherry juice and spirit, sweetened and diluted. The wild cherry is most generally used for this purpose, being steeped for some days in spirit, which extracts the juice of the fruit; the tincture is then sweetened and diluted to the taste. This cordial is moderately bitter and astringent. It is sometimes made of the masard.

Cherry-gum (che'ri-gum), n. Cerasin.

Cherry-laurel (che'ri-la-rel), n. The English name of Cerasus Lauro-cerasus, nat. order Rosaceae, a native of Asia Minor. It is commonly called laurel, but must not be confounded with the sweet bay or other true species of Laurus. The leaves yield by distillation a hydrocyanated oil, nearly identical with that got from bitter almonds. The distilled water from the leaves is used in medicine in the same way as diluted hydrocyanic or prussic acid. It is poisonous in large doses.

Cherry-pepper (che'ri-pep-er), n. A species of capsicum (C. cerasiformis), whose fruit is small and cherry-shaped.

Cherry-pit (che'ri-pit), n. A child's play, in which cherry-stones are thrown into a hole.

'Tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with Satan. Shak.

Cherry-rum (che'ri-rum), n. Rum in which cherries have been steeped.

Cherry-stick (che'ri-stik), n. A tobacco-pipe tube made of the young stems of the Mahaleb cherry, bored and the reddish-brown bark retained. Sometimes these stems are five feet long, and as straight and smooth as if turned.

Cherry-stone (che'ri-stōn), n. The seed of the cherry.

Cherry-stoner (che'ri-stōn-er), n. One who or that which removes the stones from cherries; specifically, a domestic implement which works by introducing a forked prong into the fruit, driving the stone out of the pulp.

Cherry-tree (che'ri-trē), n. A tree producing cherries. The name is mostly given to the common cultivated trees and to that which produces the black wild cherry. The wood of the latter is valued for cabinet-work. See CHERRY.

Cherry-wine (che'ri-win), n. Wine made from cherries.

Chersonese (kēr-sō-nēs), n. [Gr. chersonēsoe—cherasos, land, or uncultivated land, and nēsoe, an isle.] A peninsula; a tract of land of any indefinite extent which is nearly surrounded by water, but united to a larger tract by a neck of land or isthmus; as, the Cimbric Chersonese or Jutland; the Tauric Chersonese or Crimea; the Thracian Chersonese, the peninsula on the western side of the Hellespont. Formerly written also Chersonesus.

The sea so circles there that it becomes a chersonesus. Sir T. Herbert.

Chert (chért), n. [Probably Celtic; comp. Ir. ceart, a pebble.] A variety of quartz, called also Hornstone, Petrocalc, or Rock flint. It is less hard than common quartz; its fracture usually conchoidal and dull, sometimes splintery. It is more or less translucent. Its colours are numerous and usually dull. It is usually amorphous, sometimes globular or in nodules. It occurs often in veins, especially metallic, in primitive mountains. The name is also applied to other minerals besides hornstone. Thus those siliceous concretions which occur as nodules and layers in limestone rocks, like flints in chalk, are called chert. The Derbyshire miners apply the term black chert to a fusible mineral, whereas the hornstone above described is infusible.

Cherty (chérti), a. Like chert; full of chert; flinty.

Cherub (cher'ub), n. pl. Cherubs (cher'ubs). The Hebrew plural Cherubim is also used, and sometimes the plural is written with an n. Cherubians and Cherubins as plurals are improper. [Heb. kerub.] 1. One of an order of angels variously represented at different times, but generally as winged spirits with a human countenance, and distinguished by their knowledge from the seraphs, whose distinctive quality is love. The first mention of cherubs is in Gen. iii. 24, where the figure is not described, but their office was, with a flaming sword, to keep or guard the way of the tree of life. The cherubs, in Ezekiel's vision, had each four heads or faces, the hands of a man, and wings. The four faces were the face of a bull, that of a man, that of a lion, and that of an eagle. They had the bodily form of a man. Ezek. iv. and x. In the celestial hierarchy cherubs are represented as spirits next in order to seraphs. The hieroglyphical and emblematical figures embroidered on the veils of the tabernacle are called cherubs of curious or skillful work. Ex. xxvi.—2. A beautiful child; so called because artists have generally represented cherubs as beautiful winged children. [In this sense the plural is always cherubs.]

3. An adventure or exploit, as of a knight. 'Acts more dangerous, but less famous, because they were but private chivalries.' Sir P. Sidney.—4. A body or order of knights; knights or warriors collectively; any body of illustrious warriors, especially cavalry.

The Red Sea coast, whose waves o'erthrow
Bustis and his Memphis chivalry. Milton.

Wave, Munich, all thy banners wave,
And charge with all thy chivalry. Camphell.

5. In English law, a tenure of lands by knight's service; that is, by the condition of performing service on horseback, or of performing some noble or military service to his lord. See KNIGHT-SERVICE and TENURE.—Court of Chivalry, a court established by Edward III., of which the Lord High Constable and the Earl-marshal of England were joint judges. When both judges were present it took cognizance of criminal cases, generally in a summary manner; when held before the earl-marshal alone it was merely a court of honour. It is now in abeyance, except as represented in the Herald's College by the earl-marshal's court.

Chive (chiv), n. [L. G. scheve, the shives or fragments of stalk, as of hemp or flax, that fall off in dressing; Icel. skifa, to cleave.] In bot. the thread or filament which supports the anther of a flower. Ray.

Chive (chiv), n. See CIVE.

Chive-garlic (chiv'gar-lik), n. Same as Cive.
Chiver (chiv'er), v.t. To shiver. [Old English and Scotch.]

Chivey, Chivvy (chiv'i), v.t. [See extract.] To chase round or hunt about; to throw or pitch about. [Slang.]

Chivvy is a common English word, meaning to goad, drive, vex, hunt, or throw as it were here and there. It is purely Gipsy. Chiv in Rumanian means anything sharp-pointed, as a dagger or goad, or knife. The old Gipsy word chiv, among its numerous meanings, has exactly that of caving, throwing, pitching, and driving. C. G. Leland.

Chivey (chiv'i), n. A halloo; a shout; a cheer. [Slang.]

Chlamydate (klam'id-ât), a. [Gr. chlamys, chlamydas, a mantle.] In zool. possessing a mantle; as, chlamydate Branchiogasteropoda.

Chlamydeus (kla-mid'e-us), a. In bot. pertaining to the floral envelope of a plant.
Chlamydosaurus (klam'i-dô-sâ'srus), n. [Gr. chlamys, chlamydas; a cloak, and saurus, a lizard.] A genus of Australian lizards. The C. Kingi, known as the frilled lizard, has a curious crested membrane-like ruff or tippet round its neck, covering its shoulders, which lies back in plaits upon the body when the animal is tranquil, but which elevates itself when it is irritated or frightened. Its head is large in proportion to its body. A full-grown specimen is about 3 feet in length.

Chlamyphore (klam'i-fôr), n. See CHLAMYPHORUS.

Chlamyphorus, Chlamydophorus (klam'i-fô-rus,klam-i-dô-fô-rus), n. [Gr. chlamys, chlamydas, a cloak, and phero, to bear.] A genus of quadrupeds of the order Edentata. The C. trumacatus, or pichichiago, resembles the mole in its habits; it is about 5 inches long, and its back is covered over with a coat of mail, consisting of twenty-four rows of tough leathery plates. It is a native of Chili, and nearly allied to the armadillo.

Chlamys (klam'is), n. [L. and Gr.] 1. A light and freely-flowing scarf or plaid worn by the ancients as an outer garment. It was oblong in shape, generally about twice as long as it was broad. A common mode of wearing it was to pass one of its shorter sides round the neck and fasten it by means of a brooch, letting it hang down over the back or over the shoulder.—2. A purple cope; one of the pontifical vestments.—3. In bot. the floral envelope of a plant.

Chloasma (klô-as'ma), n. [Gr. chloasô, to be green.] In pathol. lit. greenness; a name for a cutaneous affection characterized by patches of a yellow or yellowish-brown colour, the pityriasis versicolor. It is removable by the use of sulphur.

Chloe (klô-ê), n. The name of the heroine of Longus' pastoral romance Daphnis and Chloe, and of a shepherdess in Sydney's Arcadia; hence applied in literature to a female lover.

To turn their attention away while Strephon and Chloe were billing and cooing. Thackeray.

Chlora (klô'ra), n. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow.] A small genus of gentianaceous plants, consisting of erect glaucous herbs. One species (C. perfoliata) is found in the chalky pastures of England. Its stem is from 6 to 18 inches high, and terminates in a number of flower-stalks, each bearing a single largish delicate yellow flower. The whole plant is very bitter, and may be employed as a tonic; it is used also as a yellow dye. Its popular name is yellow-root or yellow centaury.

Chloracetate (klôr-as-ê-tât), n. A salt of chloroacetic acid.

Chloroacetic Acid (klôr-a-s-ê'tik as'id), n. ($C_2H_3ClO_2$) An acid produced by the substitution of chlorine for part of the hydrogen in acetic acid. It combines with bases, forming chloracetates.

Chloral (klôr'al), n. [From chlor, the first part of chlorine, and al, the first syllable of alcohol.] (C_2H_3ClO) A liquid first prepared by Liebig from chlorine and alcohol, afterwards by Stiedeler by the action of chlorine on starch. The hydrate of chloral, as now prepared ($C_2H_3ClO \cdot H_2O$), is a white crystalline substance, which, in contact with alkalis, separates into chloroform and formic acid. Hence, when it comes into contact with living blood, the alkaline reaction of that fluid effects its decomposition, and a formation of chloroform is the result. When taken into the mouth or injected into the blood the chloroform set free is given up to the blood little by little. Hence the action of chloral differs from that of pure chloroform in being slow, gentle, and prolonged. Chloral kills by paralyzing the action of the heart. It is a hypnotic as well as an anæsthetic, and is frequently substituted for morphia. Chloral does not combine with blood out of the body. Some authorities ascribe its effects to the formic acid developed in its transformation.

Chloranil, Chloranile (klô'-a-nîl), n. [From chlorine and aniline.] ($C_6Cl_4O_2$). A compound produced by the action of chlorine on aniline, phenol, salicin, and other allied bodies. It forms pale yellow pearly scales. By dissolving it in caustic potash chloranilate of potassium is formed.

Chloranthosaceæ (klô-ran-thâ'sé-â), n. pl. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow, and anthos, a flower.] A nat. order of apetalous exogens, allied to the peppers, and, like them, having an aromatic fragrant odour; they are trees, shrubs, or herbs with opposite leaves, connected by sheathing stipules. There are three known genera, and fifteen species, all natives of the warm regions of India and America. Chloranthus officinalis is reckoned a stimulant and tonic of the highest order.

Chloranthus (klô-ran-thus), n. See CHLORANTHACEÆ.

Chlorate (klô-rât), n. [See CHLORINE.] A salt of chloric acid. The chlorates are very analogous to the nitrates. They are decomposed by a red heat, nearly all of them being converted into metallic chlorides, with evolution of pure oxygen. They deflagrate with inflammable substances with such facility that an explosion is produced by slight causes. The chlorates of sodium and potassium are used in medicine. Chloretic (klô-ret-ik), n. Same as Chloritic. Chloric (klô-rik), a. Pertaining to or containing chlorine; specifically, containing chlorine in smaller proportion than chlorous compounds.—Chloric acid, a colourless syrupy liquid ($HClO_3$), having a very acid reaction, produced by decomposing barium chlorate by means of sulphuric acid.—Perchloric acid, an extremely explosive acid ($HClO_4$), containing one atom of oxygen more than chloric acid. It is produced by distilling perchlorate of potassium with sulphuric acid.—Chloric ether, a volatile liquid ($C_2H_2Cl_2$) obtained by passing hydrochloric acid gas into alcohol to saturation and distilling the product. It is also termed Hydrochloric Ether.

Chloridate, Chloridize (klô-rid-ât, klô-rid-iz), v. t. In photog. to cover a plate with a chloride, specifically, with chloride of silver, for the purpose of rendering it sensitive to the actinic rays of the sun.

Chloride (klô-rid), n. [See CHLORINE.] A compound of chlorine with another element. Chlorimeter, Chlorimetry (klô-rim'et-er, klô-rim'e-trî), n. Same as Chlorometer, Chlorometry.

Chlorinated (klô-rin-ât-ed), a. In chem. containing one or more equivalents of chlorine.

Chlorination (klô-ri-nâ'shon), n. In mining, a process for the extraction of gold by exposure of the auriferous material to chlorine gas. E. H. Knight.

Chlorine (klô-rîn or klô-rin), n. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow, from its colour.] Sym. Cl. At wt. 35.5. The name given to an elementary gaseous substance contained in common salt, from which it is liberated by the action of sulphuric acid and manganese dioxide. Chlorine has a greenish-yellow colour, a peculiar smell, and irritates the nostrils most violently when inhaled, as also the windpipe and lungs. It exercises a corrosive action upon organic tissues. It is not combustible, though it supports the combustion of many bodies, and, indeed, spontaneously burns several. In combination with other elements it forms chlorides, which act most important parts in many manufacturing processes. This gas may be liquefied by cold and pressure. Chlorine is one of the most powerful bleaching agents, this property belonging to it through its strong affinity for hydrogen. Hence in the manufacture of bleaching-powder (chloride of lime) it is used in immense quantities. When applied to moistened coloured fabrics it acts by decomposing the moisture present, the oxygen of which then destroys the colouring matter of the cloth, &c. It is a valuable disinfectant, where it can be conveniently applied, as in the form of chloride of lime.

Chloriodic (klô-ri-od-ik), a. Compounded of chlorine and iodine.

Chloriodine (klô-rî-od-in), n. A compound of chlorine and iodine.

Chlorite (klô-rit), n. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow.] 1. A mineral of a grass-green colour, opaque, usually friable or easily pulverized, composed of little spangles, scales, prisms, or shining small grains, and consisting of silica, alumina, magnesia, and protoxide of iron. It is closely allied in character to mica and talc. There are four sub-species—chlorite earth, common chlorite, chlorite slate, and foliated chlorite. 2. In chem. a salt of chlorous acid. The chlorites are remarkable for their strong bleaching and oxidizing properties.

Chloritic (klô-rit-ik), a. Pertaining to or containing chlorite; as, chloritic sand.

Chloro- (klô-rô), [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow.] A term used in the composition of botanical and other scientific words formed from the Greek, to indicate a clear lively green colour without any mixture.

Chloro-carbonic, Chloro-carbonous (klô-rô-kar-bon'ik, klô-rô-kar-bon-us), a. Terms applied to a compound of chlorine and carbonic oxide ($COCl_2$) formed by exposing a mixture of the two gases to the direct solar rays.

Chlorocyanic (klô-rô-sî-an'ik), a. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow, and kyanos, dark-blue.] Consisting of chlorine and cyanogen combined; as, chlorocyanic acid.

Chlorodyne (klô-rô-dîn or klô-rô-din), n. A popular anodyne remedy, consisting of morphia, chloroform, prussic acid, extract of Indian hemp, and flavoured with sugar and peppermint.

Chloroform (klô-rô-form), n. [Gr. chlôros, yellowish-green, and L. formica, an ant.] ($CHCl_3$). The perchloride of formyle, a volatile colourless liquid, of an agreeable, fragrant, sweetish apple taste and smell, of the specific gravity of 1.48, and discovered by Soubeiran and Liebig in 1832. It is prepared by cautiously distilling together a mixture of alcohol, water, and chloride of lime or bleaching-powder. Its use as an anæsthetic was introduced in 1847 by Prof. (afterwards Sir James Y.) Simpson of Edinburgh. For this purpose the vapour is inhaled. The inhalation of chloroform first produces slight intoxication; then, frequently, slight muscular contractions, uneasiness, and dreaming; then loss of voluntary motion and consciousness, the patient appearing as if sound asleep; and at last, if too much be given, death by coma and syncope. When skillfully administered in proper cases, it is considered one of the safest of anæsthetics; but it requires to be used under certain precautions as its application has frequently proved fatal. Chloroform is a powerful solvent, dissolving resins, wax, iodine, &c., as well as strychnine and other alkaloids. It is a felony for any person to administer or attempt to administer chloroform or other stupefying drug with intent to enable himself or another to commit or to assist another in the commission of any indictable offence, 24 and 25 Vict. c.

Chloroform (klô-rô-form), v. t. To put under the influence of chloroform; to render unconscious and insensible to pain by the administration of chloroform; to treat with chloroform.

Chloroformization (klô-rô-form-iz-â'shon), n. In med. the aggregate of anæsthetic phenomena resulting from the inhalation of chloroform.

Chlorogenic (klô-rô-gen'ik), a. [Gr. chlôros, yellowish-green, and gennao, to produce.] See CAFFEIC.

Chloroid (klô-oid), a. [E. chlorine, and Gr. eidos, resemblance.] Resembling chlorine; as, the chloroid pole of a galvanic battery. See Chlorous Pole under CHLOROUS.

Chlorometer (klô-rom'et-er), n. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow, and metron, a measure.] An instrument for testing the decoloring or bleaching powers of chloride of lime. It is also used for testing chloride of potash and of soda.

Chlorometry (klô-rom'e-trî), n. The name given to the process for testing the decoloring power of any combination of chlorine, but especially of the commercial articles, the chlorides of lime, potash, and soda.

Chloromya (klô-rô-mis), n. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow, and mys, a mouse.] See AGOUTI.

Chloropal (klô-rô-pal), n. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow, and E. opal.] Lit. green opal. A mineral of two varieties, the conchoidal and the earthy; the conchoidal is of a pistachio-green colour, the other has an earthy fracture; and both varieties are possessed of magnetic properties. It is a hydrated silicate of iron.

Chlorophæite, Chlorophæite (klô-rô-fê-it), n. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow, and phaios, blackish.] A rare mineral found in amygdaloidal trap-rocks. It is translucent and of a green colour when newly broken, but soon becomes black and opaque. It has been supposed to be decomposed olivine, and consists of 32.85 silica, 22.08 iron peroxide, 3.44 magnesia, and 41.63 water.

Chlorophane (klô-rô-fân), n. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow, and phainô, to show.] A variety of fluor-spar which exhibits a bright-green phosphorescent light when heated.

Chlorophyll (klô-rô-phil), n. [Gr. chlôros, green, and phyllon, a leaf.] The green colouring matter of plants. It is somewhat analogous to wax, is soluble in ether and alcohol, but insoluble in water, and floats in the fluid of the cells in the form of minute granules. In this form it occurs in the a, Spiral bands of Chlorophyll in Spirogyra. c, Irregular mass in Zygnera. c, Granules in cells of the leaf.

cells of flowering plants generally, especially in the leaves, and below the epidermis of green stems. In Vallisneria and some other aquatic plants the granules are large, and imbedded in the circulating protoplasm of the cells. In some coniferous algae the chlorophyll is arranged in plates or bands, while in others it forms a granular stratum, with numerous large bright granules scattered through it. In the Protophytes, and in the gonidia of lichens, the chlorophyll is uniformly distributed through the protoplasm of the cell. The chlorophyll granule consists of two separable parts—the green colouring matter, which is soluble in alcohol, leaving a colourless body the size and form of the granule. Chlorophyll plays an important part in the life of the plant, as it breaks up the carbonic acid gas taken in by the stomata of the leaves into its two elements, carbon and oxygen, returning the oxygen to the air, and converting the carbon with the water obtained from the roots into starch. Light is indispensable to the formation of chlorophyll, and hence arises the etiolation or blanching of plants by privation of light, either by the art of the gardener or from accidental causes.

Chlorops (klô-rope), n. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow, and ops, the eye.] A genus of insects. See CORN-FLY.

Chlorosis (klô-rô-sis), n. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow.] 1. The green-sickness, a peculiar form of anemia or bloodlessness which affects young females, more especially those who have not menstruated. It is characterized by a pale or greenish hue of the skin, weakness, palpitation, dyspepsia, &c. 2. In bot. same as Etiolation.

Chlorospermæ (klô-rô-spér-mé-â), n. pl. [Gr. chlôros, greenish-yellow, and sperma, a seed.] A name given to that division of the algae which have grass-green fronds, very rarely purple, olive, or red. They grow either in the sea, in fresh water, or in damp situations, and are of very simple organization.

Chlorotic (klô-ro'tik), a. 1. Pertaining to chlorosis; as, chlorotic affections. — 2. Affected by chlorosis. 'The extasies of sedentary and chlorotic nuna.' Battie.

Chlorous (klô-rus), a. Pertaining to or containing chlorine: specifically, containing chlorine in larger proportion than chloric compounds; as, chlorous oxide, chlorous acid. — Chlorous acid (HClO₂), an acid obtained by mixing oil of vitriol very gradually and cautiously with chloride of potassium, and condensing the gas which is given off in water. The gas which is thus condensed is called chlorous anhydride (Cl₂O₃): it is extremely explosive. — Chlorous pole, a term applied, on the electrical hypothesis, to the negative pole of a galvanic battery, from its exhibiting the attraction which is characteristic of chlorine. The positive pole, according to the same hypothesis, is termed the zincous or zincoid pole. Called also Chloroid Pole.

Chloroxylon (klô-rok-sil-on), n. [Gr. chloros, yellowish-green, and xylin, wood.] A genus of timber trees, nat. order Meliaceae, containing a single species, C. Swietenia (the satin-wood tree of India). See SATIN-WOOD.

Chloruret (klô-rû-ret), n. A compound of chlorine: a name formerly given to what is now termed Chloride.

Chock (chôk), Same as Choke.
Chockite (chôk-it), n. [Gr. choand, a funnel.] A genus of spongiiform fossil zoophytes of the chalk, familiarly called 'petrified anemones,' from having the radiating appearance of a sea-anemone.

Choar (chôr), n. The Hindu name for a mountain thief or robber. Eleec. Rev.

Chock (chôk), n. (Perhaps from shock, as if shock-piece, a joint or collision, the use of chocks being often to prevent jolting.) Naut. a piece of wood employed in filling up a deficiency, as a wedge or block, for confining a cask or other body to prevent its moving. In the construction of framing, a chock is an angular, commonly a triangular shaped piece, made to fit the space between the attenuated ends at the joints, to which it is fastened by means of tree-nails. — Chocks of the rudder are pieces of timber kept in readiness to stop the motion of the rudder in case of an accident, &c. — Anchor chocks, pieces indented in the shank of a wooden anchor-stock when it is defective. — Boat's chocks, clamps on which a boat rests when stowed on deck.

Chock (chôk), adv. Naut. fully; close; as far as possible; as, chock aft, chock out, &c.
Chock (chôk), v.t. Naut. to put a chock into or under; as, to chock the timbers of a ship; to chock a cask. See the noun.

Chock (chôk) v.t. To fill up a cavity like a chock. 'The wood-work exactly chocked into the joints.' Fuller.

Chock't (chôk), n. [A form of shock (which see).] An encounter.

One of the kings of France died miserably by the chock of a hog. Br. Patriot.

Chock't (chôk), v.t. To give a shock to. Turberville.

Chock-a-block (chôk-a-blok), a. (See CHOCK and BLOCK.) 1. A term used to designate the position of tackling when the blocks are hauled close together. — 2. Crowded; crammed; as, the meeting-hall was chock-a-block. [Colloq.]

Chock-full (chôk'fûl), a. Same as Choke-full.
Chocolate (chôk'ô-lât), n. [Sp. chocolate; Mex. chocolatl — choco, cocoa, and latl, water.] 1. A paste or cake composed of the kernels of the Theobroma Cacao ground and combined with sugar and vanilla, cinnamon, cloves, or other flavouring substance. Cacao, under its native name of chocolatl, had been for ages used as a beverage by the Mexicans, before their country was conquered by the Spaniards. It is less used in Britain than cocoa, which is a slightly different preparation from the kernels of the same tree. — 2. The beverage made by dissolving chocolate in boiling water or milk.

Chocolate (chôk'ô-lât), a. Having the colour of chocolate; as, chocolate cloth.

Chocolate-house (chôk'ô-lât-hous), n. A house of entertainment in which chocolate is sold. Tatler.

Chocolate-nut (chôk'ô-lât-nut), See CACAO.

Chocolate-root (chôk'ô-lât-rôt), n. See GRUM.

Chode (chôd), the old preterit of chide (which see). Gen. xxiii. 36.

Choice (chôis), n. (O. E. choyae, choise, chois; from O. Fr. chois, a choice, from choisir, to choose; from the German. See CHOOSE.) 1. The act of choosing; the voluntary act of selecting or separating from two or more things that which is preferred; selection; election.

Ye know how that a good while ago God made choice among us that the Gentiles by my mouth should hear the word of the gospel, and believe. Acts xv. 7.

2. The power of choosing; option.
Where there is force there can be no choice. N. Grew.

3. Care in selecting; judgment or skill in distinguishing what is to be preferred, and in giving a preference.

Julius Caesar did write a collection of apophthegms; it is a pity his book is lost; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon.

4. The thing chosen; that which is approved and selected in preference to others' selection.

I am sorry
Your choice is not so rich in birth as beauty. Shak.

5. The best part of anything; a select assemblage.
A braver choice of dauntless spirits
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shak.

6. A collection to choose from; as, you have there a choice of six different colours. — 'To hold in most rich choice, to hold in very high estimation. Shak. — 'To make choice of, to choose; to select; to separate and take in preference. — Of choice, of worth or value; as, men of choice.

Choice (chôis), a. 1. Carefully selected. 'Choice word and measured phrase, above the reach of ordinary men.' Wordsworth. — 2. Worthy of being preferred; select; precious; very valuable. 'The choice and master spirits of this age.' Shak.

Thus in a sea of folly tossed,
My choicest hours of life are lost. Swift.

3. With of: preserving or using with care, as valuable; frugal; careful; chary.

He that is choice of his time will also be choice of his company, and choice of his actions. Fer. Taylor.

SYN. Select, precious, costly, exquisite, uncommon, rare, sparing, frugal, chary, careful.

Choice-drawn (chôis'dran), a. Selected with particular care. Shak.

Choiceful (chôis'fûl), a. Making many choices; fitful; fickle.

His choiceful sense with every change doth fit. Senser.

Choiceless (chôis'les), a. Not having the power of choosing. Hammond. [Rare.]

Choicely (chôis'li), adv. 1. With care in choosing; with nice regard to preference; with exact choice. 'Collected choicely.' Shak. 2. In an eminent degree. 'It is choicely good.' Iz. Walton. — 3. With great care; carefully; as, a thing choicely preserved. [In all its uses obsolete or obsolescent.]

Choiceness (chôis'nes), n. The quality of being choice; as, (a) justness of discrimination; nicety. 'Choiceness of phrase.' B. Jonson. (b) Valueableness; particular value or worth; excellence; as, the choiceness of wine. 'Plants . . . for their choiceness preserved in pots.' Evelyn.

Choir (kwîr), n. [Written also quire, from O. Fr. choeur, L. chorus, Gr. chorus, a dance in a ring, a band.] 1. A band of dancers. [Rare.]

How often have I led thy sportive choir,
With tuneless pipe beside the murmuring Loire. Goldsmith.

2. A collection of singers, especially in divine service, in a church. — 3. That part of a church appropriated for the singers. — 4. In cruciform churches, that part eastward of the nave, and separated from it usually by a screen of open work; a chancel. — 5. In nunneries, a large hall adjoining to the body of the church, separated by a grate, where the nuns sing the office.

Choir (kwîr), v.t. and i. To sing in company.

On either side (of the Virgin), round the steps of the throne, is a crowd of choirs of angels. Ferraro.

Choirist (kwîr'ist-ér), Same as Chorister. W. Mason.

Choir-organ (kwîr'or-gan), n. One of the aggregated organs which are combined in an organ of large power.

Choir-screen (kwîr'skrén), n. An ornamental open screen of wood or stone, dividing the choir or chancel of a cathedral or church from the nave, yet so as not to obstruct sight or sound.

Choir-service (kwîr'sér-vis), n. The service of singing performed by a choir.

Choke (chôk), v.t. pret. & pp. choked; ppr.

choking. [A. Sax. ascocian, to suffocate; cogn. Isel kaka, to gulp, kýka, to swallow; according to Skeat from a root kak, a stronger form of kik, of which kink is a nasalized form. (See CHIN-COUGH.)] The root may be imitative of the convulsive sound made when the throat is impeded.] 1. To deprive of the power of breathing by stopping the passage of the breath through the windpipe: it is thus distinguished from suffocate, stifle, and smother, which signify to deprive of the power of breathing by closing the avenues to the windpipe (the mouth and nostrils), or by preventing the access of wholesome air; while strangle designates a particular manner of choking, namely, by compressing the windpipe. Formerly the word was used with more latitude. 'And were choked in the sea.' Mark v. 13. — 2. To stop by filling; to obstruct; to block up; as, to choke the entrance of a harbour or any passage. — 3. To hinder by obstruction or impediments, especially by a heap of impediments crowded together; to hinder or check the growth, expansion, or progress of. 'The fire which choked in ashes lay.' Dryden.

And some fell among thorns; and the thorns sprung up and choaked them. Mat. xiii. 7.

4. Fig. to suppress or stifle.

For to deny each article with oath,
Canst remove not choke the strong conception
That I do groan withal. Shak.

5. To offend greatly; to revolt. 'I was choked at this word.' Swift.

Choke (chôk), v.t. 1. To have the windpipe stopped, as cattle are apt to choke when eating potatoes or turnips. — 2. To be checked, as if by choking; to stick. 'The words choke in his throat.' Sir W. Scott. — 3. To be offended; to take exception.

Choke (chôk), n. The filamentous or capillary part of the artichoke.

Choke (chôk), n. An Indian term for the principal street of a town or village. W. H. Russell.

Choke-cherry (chôk'che-rî), n. 1. The popular name of a species of wild cherry (Prunus borealis), remarkable for its astringent qualities. — 2. In mining, choke-damp; after-damp.

Choke-damp (chôk'damp), n. Same as after-damp.

Chokedar (chôk'ô-dâr), n. Same as Chokadar.

Choke-full (chôk'fûl), n. Full as possible; written also Chock-full, Chuck-full, and formerly also Chock-full. 'We filled the skins chock-full.' Brace.

Chokeling (chôk'ling), p. and a. Chuckling. Chaucer.

Choke-pear (chôk'pâr), n. 1. A kind of pear that has a rough astringent taste, and is swallowed with difficulty, or which contracts the parts of the mouth. Hence — 2. Anything that stops the mouth; an unanswerable argument; an aspersion or sarcasm by which a person is put to silence.

Pardon me for going so low as to talk of giving choke-pear. Richardson.

Christmas-log (kris'mas-log), n. A large log of wood, which in old times formed the basis of the fire at Christmas.

Christmas-pie (kris'mas-pi), n. A pie made at Christmas. Spectator.

Christmas-rose (kris'mas-rōz), n. A plant, Helleborus niger, so called from its open rose-like flower, which blossoms during the winter months. See HELLEBORUS.

Christmas-tide, Christmas-tide, Christmas-time (kris'mas-tid, kris'mas-tim), n. The season of Christmas.

Christmas-tree (kris'mas-trē), n. A small evergreen tree or large branch with offshoots set up in a family, &c., at Christmas, from which are hung presents, generally with the names of the recipients inscribed on them.

Christodelphian, n. See CHRISTADELPHIAN.

Christology (kris-to-lō-jī), n. [Gr. Christos, Christ, and logos, a discourse.] A discourse or treatise concerning Christ; that branch of divinity that deals directly with Christ. 'That part of divinity which I make bold to call Christology.' Th. Jackson.

Christolyte (kris-tō-lit), n. [Gr. Christos, Christ, and lyō, to loose.] One of a sect of Christians of the sixth century who held that, when Christ descended into hell, he left both his body and soul there, and rose with his divine nature alone.

Christ's-thorn (kris't-thorn), n. The Paliurus aculeatus, a deciduous shrub, a native of Palestine and the south of Europe: so named from a belief that it supplied the crown of thorns for Christ. See PALIURUS. Christ-tide † (kris'tid), n. [Christ, and tide, in sense of season, as in Whitsun-tide.] Christmas. B. Jonson.

Chromascope (krō'ma-skōp), n. [Gr. chrōma, colour, and skopōs, to see, to look at.] An instrument for showing the optical effects of colour.

Chromate (krō'māt), n. [See CHROMIUM.] A salt of chromic acid.—Chromate of iron, a mineral substance which affords one of the most beautiful and durable pigments known.—The chromate and bichromate of potassium are much used in calico-printing, and the chromates of lead are employed as yellow and red dyes and paints.

Chromatic (krō'mat'ik), a. [Gr. chrōmatikos, from chrōma, colour, from chrōs, to colour. The term is applied to music from the fact that the intermediate tones were formerly written in different colours.] 1. Relating to colour.—Chromatic printing, printing from types or blocks covered with various colours of ink.—Chromatic type, type made in parts, which are inked of various colours and separately impressed, so as to unite into a variegated whole.—2. In music, including notes not belonging to the diatonic scale.—Chromatic chord, a chord which contains a note or notes foreign to diatonic progression.—Chromatic harmony, harmony consisting of chromatic chords.—Chromatic scale, a scale made up of thirteen successive semitones, that is, the eight diatonic tones and the five intermediate tones.

Chromatic (krō'mat'ik), n. [See above.] A kind of music that proceeds by several consecutive semitones or semitonic intervals; or it denotes accidental semitones.

Chromatic † (krō'mat'ik-al), a. Same as Chromatic.

Among sundry kinds of music, that which is called chromatical delighteth, enlargeth and joyeth the heart. Holland.

Chromatically (krō'mat'ik-al-li), adv. In a chromatic manner.

Chromatics (krō'mat'iks), n. The science of colours; that part of optics which treats of the properties of the colours of light and of natural bodies.

Chromatography (krō'ma-tog'ra-fi), n. [Gr. chrōma, chrōmatos, colour, and graphē, description.] A treatise on colours.

Chromatology (krō'ma-to-lō-jī), n. [Gr. chrōma, chrōmatos, colour, and logos, discourse.] The doctrine of or a treatise on colours.

Chromatometer (krō'ma-tom'et-ēr), n. [Gr. chrōma, chrōmatos, colour, and metron, a measure.] A scale for measuring colours.

And thus . . . the prismatic spectrum of sunlight became, for certain purposes, an exact chromatometer. W. Russell.

Chromatophore (krō'mat'ō-fōr), n. [Gr. chrōma, chrōmatos, colour, and phero, to bear.] One of the pigment cells in animals, well seen in the chameleons and cuttlefishes. The cells being mobile, and containing pigment-granules of different colours, enable the animals to change their colours rapidly, under irritation or excitement. H. A. Nicholson.

Chromatophore, Chromatope (krō'ma-trōp, krō'mō-trōp), n. [Gr. chrōma, colour, and trōpōs, to turn.] An arrangement in a magic lantern similar in its effect to the kaleidoscope. The pictures are produced by brilliant designs being painted on two circular glasses and the glasses being made to rotate in opposite directions. E. H. Knight.

Chromatype, Chromotype (krō'ma-tip, krō'mō-tip), n. [From Gr. chrōma, colour, and E. type.] In photog. (a) a process for obtaining coloured photographic pictures by the employment of paper sensitized by some of the salts of chromium. (b) a picture produced by this process.

Chrome (krōm), n. Same as Chromium. Chrome-alum (krōm'al-um), n. A crystallizable double salt, formed of the sulphates of chromium and potassium.

Chrome-colour (krōm'kul-ēr), n. Properly, a colour prepared from some of the salts of chromium, but generally applied to any colour which, when dry, is of a soft powdery consistence, and may be mixed with oil without grinding.

Chrome-green (krōm'grēn), n. A beautiful dark-green pigment prepared from the oxide of chromium.

Chrome-iron (krōm'ī-ēr-n), n. Chromate of iron. See under CHROMATE.

Chrome-orange (króm'or-anj), n. A bright yellow pigment, consisting of chromate of lead.

Chrome-red (króm'red), n. A beautiful red pigment prepared from red-lead. It is a basic chromate of lead.

Chrome-yellow (króm'yel-ló), n. A name given to chromate of lead, from its colour. It is a brilliant yellow pigment much used in the arts.

Chromic (króm'ík), a. Pertaining to chrome or chromium, or obtained from it; as, chromic acid. This acid (Cr_2O_3 , more properly termed chromic oxide) destroys the colour of indigo and of most vegetable and animal colouring matters, a property advantageously employed in calico-printing. It forms coloured salts with alkaline bases, the most important of which is chromate of lead, which is of a rich yellow colour, and is largely employed in the arts of painting and dyeing.

Chromides, Chromides (króm'i-dé, króm'i-déz), n. pl. [Gr. chromis, a kind of sea-fish, and eidos, resemblance.] A family of teleostean fishes, generally inhabiting the fresh waters of hot climates, allied to the Labridæ or true wrasses. Some are good eating, and one Nile species, with cycloid instead of, as in the others, ctenoid scales, is reckoned the best in the river.

Chromium (króm'i-on), n. Same as Chromium.

Chromism (króm'izm), n. [Gr. chroma, colour.] In bot. an unnatural colouring of plants or leaves.

Chromite (króm'it), n. A mineral containing chromium.

Chromium (króm'i-um), n. [Gr. chroma, colour.] Sym. Cr. At. wt. 52. A metal which forms very hard steel-gray masses: it never occurs native, but may be obtained by reducing the oxide. In its highest degree of oxidation it forms a salt of a ruby-red colour. It takes its name from the various and beautiful colours which its oxide and acid communicate to minerals into whose composition they enter. Chromium is employed to give a fine deep green to the enamel of porcelain, to glass, &c. The oxide of chromium is of a bright grass-green or pale yellow colour. Also called Chrome and sometimes Chromion.

Chrome (króm'ó), n. A contraction for Chromo-lithograph.

Chromochre, Chrome-stone (króm'ó-kér, króm'ó-stón), n. A mineral containing the oxides of chrome and of iron, silica, and alumina. It occurs in loose earthy masses, of a fine yellowish green, generally so mixed up with the rock in which it occurs as to be separable only by chemical means.

Chromogen (króm'ó-jen), n. [Gr. chroma, colour, and gennao, to produce.] Same as Chromule.

Chromogenic (króm'ó-jen'ík), a. Pertaining to chromogen.

Chromograph (króm'ó-graf), n. [Gr. chroma, colour, and grapho, to write.] A coloured engraving.

Chromolith (króm'ó-lith), n. A short form of Chromo-lithograph.

Chromo-lithograph (króm'ó-lith'ó-graf), n. A picture obtained by means of chromo-lithography.

Chromo-lithographer (króm'ó-li-thog'raf-ér), n. One who practises chromo-lithography.

Chromo-lithographic (króm'ó-lith'ó-graf'ík), a. Pertaining to chromo-lithography.

Chromo-lithography (króm'ó-lith'ó-gra-fí), n. A method of producing a coloured or tinted lithographic picture, by using various stones having different portions of the picture drawn upon them with inks of various colours and so arranged as to blend into a complete picture. Sometimes so many as twenty different colours are employed. In printing the lighter shades are printed off first and the darkest last.

Chromosphere (króm'ó-sfer), n. [Gr. chroma, colour, and sphaira, a sphere.] The name given to the gaseous envelope supposed to exist round the body of the sun, through which the light of the photosphere passes. J. N. Lockyer. — Stellar chromosphere, the gaseous envelope supposed to exist round the body of a star.

Chromospheric (króm'ó-sfer'ík), a. Pertaining or relating to a chromosphere; as, the chromospheric spectrum.

Chromotrope, n. See CHROMATROPE.

Chromotype, n. See CHROMATYPE.

Chromule (króm'úli), n. [Gr. chroma, colour.]

The colouring matter of plants other than green. Called also Chromogen.

Chronic (krón'ík), a. [Gr. chronikos, from chronos, time, duration.] 1. Pertaining to time; having reference to time. — 2. Continuing a long time, as a disease. A chronic disease is one which is inveterate or of long continuance, in distinction from an acute disease, which speedily terminates.

Chronical (krón'ík-al), a. Same as Chronic, 1. Partly on a chronical and partly on a topical method. J. A. Alexander.

Chronicle (krón'í-kl), n. [Fr. chronique, a chronicle. See CHRONIC.] 1. A historical account of facts or events disposed in the order of time; a history, more especially one of a simple, unpretentious character. 'Irish chronicles which are most fabulous and forged.' Spenser. — 2. That which contains, conveys, or suggests history.

Europe . . . her very ruins tell the history of times gone by, and every mouldering stone is a chronicle. Irving.

3. pl. The title of two books of the Old Testament, consisting mainly of the annals of the kingdom of Judah. The authorship is commonly ascribed to Ezra. — History, Chronicle, Annals. See under HISTORY.

Chronicle (krón'í-kl), v. t. pret. & pp. chronicled; ppr. chronicling. To record in history or chronicle; to record; to register. 'To suckle fools and chronicle small beer.' Shak.

Chronicler (krón'í-klér), n. A writer of a chronicle; a recorder of events in the order of time.

After my death I wish no other herald. . . . But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shak.

Chronologist (krón'í-klíst), n. A chronicler.

Shelton.

Chronicon (krón'í-kon), n. Same as Chronicle.

Chronique (krón'ík), n. A chronicle. L. Addison.

Chronogram (krón'ó-gram), n. [Gr. chronos, time, and gramma, a letter or writing, from grapho, to write.] An inscription in which a certain date or epoch is expressed by numeral letters, as in the motto of a medal struck by Gustavus Adolphus in 1632. ChristVs DVX: ergo trIVMphVs.

Chronogrammatic, Chronogrammatial (krón'ó-gram-mat'ík, krón'ó-gram-mat'ík-al), a. Belonging to a chronogram; containing a chronogram. 'A chronogrammatical verse.' Howell.

Chronogrammatially (krón'ó-gram-mat'ík-al-lí), adv. In the manner of a chronogram. Wood.

Chronogrammatist (krón'ó-gram-mat'íst), n. A writer of chronograms. Addison.

Chronograph (krón'ó-graf), n. 1. A chronogram. — 2. The name given to various devices for measuring and registering very minute portions of time with extreme precision. Benson's chronograph is, in principle, a lever watch with a double seconds hand, the one superimposed on the other. The outer end of the lowermost hand has a small cup filled with a black viscid fluid, with a minute hole at the bottom, while the corresponding end of the uppermost is bent down so as just to reach the hole. At the starting (say) of a horse-race, the observer pulls a string, whereupon the bent end of the upper hand passes through the hole and makes a black mark on the dial, instantly rebounding. Again, as each horse passes the winning post, the string is redrawn and a dot made, and thus the time occupied by each horse is noted. This chronograph registers to one-tenth of a second. Strange's chronograph is connected with the pendulum of an astronomical clock, which makes a mark on a sheet of paper at the beginning and end of each swing. By touching a spring on the appearance (say) of a particular star on the field of a telescope, an additional dot is made intermediate between the two extreme ones, and by measuring the distance of this from either of these extremes the exact time can be ascertained to one-hundredth of a second. Schultze's chronograph, in which electricity is applied, is yet far more precise, registering time to the five-hundred-thousandth part of a second. By it the initial velocity of a cannon-bullet may be ascertained. This name has also been given to the class of instruments described under Chronoscope.

Chronographer (krón'ó-graf-ér), n. [Gr. chronos, time, and grapho, to describe.] One who writes concerning time or the events of time; a chronologist. 'Our monkish and succeeding chronographers.' Selden.

Chronography (krón'ó-gra-fí), n. The description or investigation of past events; chronology. [Rare.]

Chronologist (krón'ó-jér), n. Same as Chronologist.

Chronologic, Chronological (krón'ó-loj'ík, krón'ó-loj'ík-al), a. Relating to chronology; containing an account of events in the order of time; according to the order of time; as, a chronologic table; a chronological narrative.

Chronologically (krón'ó-loj'ík-al-lí), adv. In a chronological manner; in a manner according with the order of time, the series of events, or rules of chronology.

Chronologist (krón'ó-loj'íst), n. One versed in chronology; a person who investigates the dates of past events and transactions.

Chronology (krón'ó-lí), n. [Gr. chronologia — chronos, time, and logos, discourse or doctrine.] The science of time: (a) the method of measuring or computing time by regular divisions or periods, according to the revolutions of the sun or moon; this is what is termed astronomical or mathematical chronology. (b) The science of ascertaining the true periods or years when past events or transactions took place, and arranging them in their proper order according to their dates: this is what is called historical chronology, and when the word chronology is used without a qualifying term it has this signification.

Chronometer (krón'ó-met'ér), n. [Gr. chronos, time, and metron, measure.] 1. Any instrument that measures time or that divides time into equal portions, or that is used for that purpose, as a clock, watch, or dial. Specifically, this term is applied to those time-keepers which are used for determining the longitude at sea, or for any other purpose where an accurate measure of time is required, with great portability in the instrument. The chronometer differs from the ordinary watch in the principle of its escapement, which is so constructed that the balance is free from the wheels during the greater part of its vibration, and also in being fitted with a 'compensation adjustment,' calculated to prevent the expansion and contraction of the metal by the action of heat and cold from affecting its movements. Marine chronometers generally beat half seconds, and are hung in gimbals in boxes 6 or 8 inches square. The pocket chronometer does not differ in appearance from a watch except that it is somewhat larger. In some cases these beat four-tenth seconds. — To rate a chronometer is to ascertain the exact rate of its gain or loss as compared with true time, for the purpose of making the proper allowance in computations dependent thereon. — 2. In music, a name sometimes given to what is properly called a metronome (which see).

Chronometrical, Chronometrical (krón'ó-met'rik, krón'ó-met'rik-al), a. Pertaining to a chronometer; measured by a chronometer. — Chronometrical governor, an improved regulator for rendering the mean velocity of an engine uniform.

Chronometry (krón'ó-met'ri), n. The art of measuring time; the measuring of time by periods or divisions.

Chronoscope (krón'ó-skóp), n. [Gr. chronos, time, and skopeo, to observe.] An instrument for measuring the duration of extremely short-lived phenomena; more especially, the name given to instruments of various forms for measuring the velocity of projectiles. The most general arrangement consists of a series of screens through which a bullet is made to pass; the rupture of each screen breaking for a moment the continuity of an electric current, setting in action an electro-magnetic machine, and making a permanent mark or record.

Chrysalid (kris'a-lid), n. A chrysalis.

Chrysalis (kris'a-lis), n. The pl. is properly Chrysalides (kris'al'i-déz). [Gr. chrysalis, a grub, from chrysos, gold, from its golden colour.] A form which butterflies, moths, and most other insects assume when they change from the state of larva or caterpillar and before they arrive at their winged or perfect state. In the chrysalis form the animal is in a state of rest or insensibility, and exists without nutriment, the length of time varying with the species and season. During this period an elaboration is going on in the interior of the chrysalis, giving to the organs of the future animal their proper development before it breaks its envelope.

Chuck-a-by (chuk'-a-by), n. A term of endearment.

Chuck-farting (chuk'-fart-ing), n. A play in which a farting is pitched or chucked into a hole.

He lost his money at chuck-farting, shuffle-cup, and all-four.

Chuck-fall (chuk'-ful), n. A colloquial form of Chuck-fall or Choke-fall.

Chuck-hole (chuk'-hol), n. A steep hole in a wagon-rut.

Chuckie (chuk'-i), n. [Scotch] 1. A barn-door fowl, used also as a term of endearment. — 2. A chuckie stone.

Chuckie-stone (chuk'-i-stan), n. A pebble, such as children use in a game, in which they chuck a number of them up, catching them on the back of their hand as they fall.

Chuckie (chuk'-i), v. t. pret. & pp. chuckied; pp. chucking. [A freq. and dim. from chuck, to cry like a hen.] 1. To call, as a hen her chickens.

If these birds are within distance, here's that will chuckle em together.

2. To fondle; to cooer.

Your confessor, that parcel of holy guts and garbage, he must chuckle you.

Chuckie (chuk'-i), v. i. 1. To cackle, as a hen or other fowl.

It clattered here, it chuckled there. It stirred the old wife's wrath.

2. [In this sense perhaps rather connected with chuck than chuck] To laugh in a suppressed or broken manner; to feel inward triumph or exultation.

The fellow rubbed his great hands and chuckled.

Chuckie (chuk'-i), n. 1. The call of a hen and some other birds to their young. 2. A short suppressed laugh, expressive of satisfaction, exultation, and the like.

The Jew rubbed his hands with a chuckle.

Chuckie-head (chuk'-i-head), n. A person with a large head, a dunce, a numskull.

Chuckie-headed (chuk'-i-head-ed), a. Having a chuckie-head, large or thick headed; stupid.

Chuckling (chuk'-ling), p. and n. Laughing in a suppressed, choking manner; uttered in chuckles, as half-suppressed, triumphant, or derisive laughter; rejoicing or exulting without much demonstration.

Chuck-Will's-widow (chuk'-wills-wid'-o), n. In America, the popular name of a bird of the family Caprimulgidae or goat-suckers, the Caprimulgus carolinensis.

Chud (chud), v. t. To champ; to bite.

Chudder (chud'-der), n. In India, a wrapper made of silk muslin or cambric, used to envelop the upper part of a woman, and worn in loose folds.

Chuff (chuf), n. See CHUFF.

Chuff (chuf), n. [Perhaps from W. off, a stock or stump.] A coarse, heavy, dull, or surly fellow; a niggard, an old miser. 'Ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here.'

Chuff (chuf), v. [See CHUFF] 1. To chuff; to snort. 2. To chuff; to snort.

Chuffly (chuf'-li), adv. In a chuffy manner, surly, clownishly. 'John answered chuffly.'

Chuffiness (chuf'-ness), n. [See CHUFF] 1. Chubbiness. — 2. Surlyness.

Chuffy (chuf'-i), a. [In first sense apparently a form of chubby. (See CHUBBY) in meaning 2 from chuff (the noun)] 1. Fat or swelled out, especially in the cheeks, chuffy. 2. Bunt, clownish; surly; angry.

Chuffy-brick (chuf'-i-brik), n. A brick which is puffed out by the escape of rarefied air or steam in the process of burning.

Chulan (chul'-an), n. A Chinese plant, the Chloranthus inaequalis, nat. order Chloranthaceae, the spikes of the flowers of which are used to scent tea.

Chum (chum), n. [Abbrev. of chamber-fellow; Dr. Johnson calls it a term used in the universities.] One who lodges or resides in the same room or rooms, hence, a close companion, a bosom-friend, an intimate.

Chum (chum), v. i. To occupy the same room or rooms with another, to be the chum of some one. 'Wits forced to chum with common sense.'

Chum (chum), v. t. pret. & pp. chummed;

ppr. chumming. To put into the same room with another.

You'll be chummed on somebody to-morrow, and then you'll be all snug and comfortable.

Chumar (chum'-ar), n. [Anglo-Indian.] A worker in leather; a shoemaker; a cobbler.

Chumage (chum'-aj), n. Actor or condition of chumming. In extract used adjectivally.

Your chumage-dickat will be on twenty-seven, in the third.

Chump (chump), n. [According to Skeat, the same word as leal lumber, as seen in tre-lumber, a tree-chump, a log, from lumber, lubber, a chopping, rubbs, to chop, and therefore allied to E. chop, club. Chum appears to be merely a modified form of this.] A short, thick, heavy piece of wood.

Chump-end (chump'-end), n. In cookery, the thicker end of a loin of veal or mutton nearest the tail.

Chumship (chum'-ship), n. The state of being a chum, or having the same chambers with another; close intimacy. De Quincey.

Chunam (chu'-nam), n. In the East Indies, a name given to lime, or a mixture made of lime as stucco. The Madras chunam, made of calcined shells, is esteemed the best in India.

Chunk (chunk), n. [See CHUMP.] A short thick piece of wood or other material. [Provincial English and American.]

Chunky (chunk'-i), a. Short and thick; as, a chunky boy.

Chupatty (chu'-pat-i), n. [Anglo-Indian.] An unleavened cake made of flour, water, and salt. 'Tea and beer, and jam for breakfast, and plenty of hot chupatties.'

Church (cherch), n. [O.E. chirke, chirche, &c. A Sax. ciro, ciros, cyrics (of course with the c's all hard), from Gr. kyriakon, a church, from kyrie, the Lord, the word therefore strictly to places of public worship belonging to the Anglican or Established Church, the terms chapel and meeting-house being used for those belonging to dissenting bodies. 2. The collective body of Christians, or of those who profess to believe in Christ, and acknowledge him to be the Saviour of mankind; in this sense the church is sometimes called the Catholic or Universal Church. 3. A particular body of Christians united under one form of ecclesiastical government, in one creed, and using the same ritual and ceremonies, as the English Church; the Gallican Church; the Presbyterian Church; the Romish Church; the Greek Church. 'Pious varieties from the Church' Tennyson. Hence, ecclesiastical authority; as, the same criminal may be absolved by the state, yet censured by the church. — 4. The worshippers of Jehovah or the true God before the advent of Christ; as, the Jewish Church. — 5. A temple; a place devoted to religious ceremonies.

Ye have brought hither these men, which are neither robbers of churches, nor yet blasphemers of your goddesses.

Above them all the church of June she did cease.

— Church militant, that portion of Christians now on earth, warring against the world, the flesh, and the devil. — Church triumphant, the collective body of saints now glorified in heaven.

Church (cherch), v. t. 1. To perform with or for any one the office of returning thanks in the church, after any signal deliverance, as from the dangers of childbirth.

Cigar (si-gār), n. [Fr. cigare, Sp. cigarro, originally the name of a kind of tobacco in Cuba.] A small roll of tobacco leaves carefully made up, and intended to be smoked by lighting at one end and drawing the smoke through it. It differs from a cheroot chiefly in form, having the mouth end pointed, the other cut square.

Cigarette (sig-ar-ēt'), n. [Fr. dim. of cigare.] A little fine tobacco rolled up in tissue paper so as to form a small cylinder, and lighted at one end for smoking.

Cigar-holder, Cigar-tube (si-gār'hōld-ēr, si-gār'tūb), n. A mouth-piece or tube used for smoking cigars.

Ciliary (sil'ēr-i), n. [Contr. for ciliary, from its resemblance to the eyelash.] In arch. the drapery or foliage carved on the heads of columns.

Cilia (sil'i-a), n. pl. [L. cilium, an eyelash.] 1. In anat. the hairs which grow from the margin of the eyelids; eyelashes. Dunglison. 2. In bot. hairs or bristles situated on the margin of a vegetable body, as those of the inner peristome of a moss. — 3. In physiol. small, generally microscopic, hair-like organs or appendages, averaging $\frac{1}{100}$ inch in length, found on the surface of the tissues of most animals, and in some vegetable organisms (as Volvox), chiefly on tissues which are in contact with water or which produce fluid secretions. They are constantly in a state of active movement, and communicate to the fluid with which they are in contact the same motion. This is called vibratile or ciliary motion. In most of the lower animals the respiratory function is aided by means of the vibratile cilia, which propel currents of water over the gills; many animals move by a similar mechanism; and in the highest classes of animals vibratile cilia have a share in the performance of some important functions.

Ciliary (sil'i-a-ri), a. 1. Belonging to the eyelids. — Ciliary processes, the folds into which the choroid coat is gathered around the crystalline lens. — Ciliary circle or ligament, a kind of grayish ring, situated between the choroid membrane, the iris, and the sclerotic. — 2. Pertaining to or performed by vibratile cilia; as, ciliary motion.

Ciliated (sil-i-āt), n. pl. An order of infusorian animals, distinguished by the general possession of cilia. Vorticella and Paramecium are familiar examples.

Ciliate, Ciliated (sil'i-āt, sil'i-āt-ed), a. Furnished with cilia; bearing cilia: (a) in bot. furnished or surrounded with hairs or fine bristles resembling the hairs of the eyelids; applied to leaves, corollæ, petals, &c. (b) in physiol. furnished with cilia endowed with vibratory motion; as, the ciliated epithelium lining the windpipe.

Cilice (si-lis'), n. [See CILICIOUS.] A kind of garment made of haircloth. Southey.

Cilicious (si-lis'hus), a. [L. cilicium, Gr. kilikion, a coarse cloth made of the wool of goats of Cilicia.] Made or consisting of hair. 'A cilicious or sackcloth habit.' Sir T. Browne.

Ciliform (sil'i-i-form), a. [Cilia, and L. forma, form.] Having the form of cilia; very fine or slender; specifically, applied to the teeth of certain fishes when numerous and all equally fine, as the teeth of the perch.

Cilibrachiate (sil'i-ō-brak'i-āt), a. [Cilia, and L. brachium, the arm.] In physiol. having the arms furnished with cilia, as in Polyzoa.

Ciliograde, Ciliogrades (sil'i-ō-grā'da, sil'i-ō-grād), n. pl. [Cilia, and L. gradior, to advance.] Same as Ctenophora.

Ciliograde (sil'i-ō-grād), a. [See above.] Moving by means of cilia.

Ciliated Leaf.

supralunal urns in which the ashes of bodies which had been burned were deposited.

Cineration (sin'e-rā-shun), n. [From L. cinis, ashes.] The reducing of anything to ashes by combustion.

Cinereous, a. See CINERACEOUS.

Cinerritious (sin'e-rishus), a. [L. cinerritus. See CINERARY.] 1. Having the colour or consistence of ashes, ash-gray.—2. In anat. a term applied to the exterior or cortical part of the brain. The cinerritious tubercle is the floor of the third ventricle of the brain.

Cineralent (sin'er-ā-lent), a. Full of ashes. See Bedley.

Cingalese (sing-gā-lār), n. Pertaining to the primitive inhabitants of Ceylon, or to the island itself. Also written Cinghalan.

Cingalese (sing-gā-lār), n. sing. and pl. A member of the primitive race inhabiting Ceylon, the primitive races of Ceylon collectively.

Cinglet (sing-g'l), n. [L. cingulum, from cingo, to gird.] A girdle. See Buckram.

Cingulum (sing-gū-lum), n. (L., a belt or girdle.) 1. Besides the girdle with which the skin of a serpent is gathered in at the waist.—2. Is used a term applied to the neck of a tooth, or that more or less distinct constriction which separates the crown from the fang.

Cinthonidae (sin-i-thon-i-dē), n. pl. [L. cinthia, a hair-curler, and Or cinthia, thimble.] A family of spiders, several species of which are common in England, residing in crevices of rocks and walls, &c., or under leaves or old bark, weaving nets of a most elaborate description connected with their retreat by means of a tunnel, through which the animal darts when it feels the vibration of an insect in the web. The Cintha ferax, a very voracious species, may be mentioned as typical.

Cinnabar (sin-na-bār), n. [L. cinnaabaris, Or cinnaabari, a word of Eastern origin. For cinthar.] (HgS) 1. Red sulphide of mercury. Native cinnabar is a compact, very heavy amorphous mineral, which occurs in Spain, Hungary, Chili, Mexico, Japan, &c. Artificial cinnabar is of crystalline structure, and is prepared by subliming the amorphous sulphide. It is used as a pigment, and is also called vermillion. Hyacinth cinnabar, an impure variety of a liver-brown colour and sub-metallic lustre. Dumet.—2. A red resinous juice obtained from an East Indian tree (Cassipouira), formerly used as an astringent, dragon's-blood.

Cinnabaris, Cinnabarine (sin-na-bār-in), n. Pertaining to cinnabar; consisting of cinnabar or containing it, as, cinnabarine sand.

Cinnamic, Cinnamomic (sin-nam'ik, sin-nam'ik), a. Pertaining to or obtained from cinnamon.

Cinnamomum (sin-na-mō-mum), n. [See below.] A genus of plants, nat. order Lauraceae, natives of tropical Asia and the Polynesian Islands. They have ribbed leaves, and a six-lobed calyx with nine stamens in three rows, each anther has four cells which open inwardly, except in the outer row. All the species possess an aromatic volatile oil. Two of the species yield cinnamon and cassia-lignum. See CINNAMON and CASSIA.

Cinnamon (sin-na-mō), n. [L. cinnamomum, from Or cinnamomum, through Phon, from Heb. cinamon.] 1. The name given to trees of the genus Cinnamomum, especially to C. zeylanicum. This tree is cultivated for its bark in Ceylon, the Malabar coast, Sumatra, and Borneo. It is sometimes confounded with C. Cassia, which yields the Chinese or common variety of cassia-lignum.

2. The inner bark of C. zeylanicum. It is stripped off the branches, and in drying it takes the form of rolls called quills, the smaller quills being introduced as they are drying into the larger ones. The true cinnamon is a grateful aromatic, of a fragrant smell, moderately pungent taste, accompanied with some degree of astringency and is one of the best cordial, stimulative, and restorative species. The bark of C. Cassia, being cheaper, is often substituted for true cinnamon, but it is thicker, coarser, and less delicate in flavour.—Oil of cinnamon, an oil obtained from the bark of different trees of the genus Cinnamomum. The oil consists chiefly of cinnamic aldehyde (C₉H₇O), mixed with various resins. Clove cinnamon is the bark of a tree growing in Brazil (Dryobalanus aromaticum), which is often substituted for real clove. White cinnamon or Cassia alba, is the bark of a tree growing in the West Indies, of a sharp, biting taste, like pepper.

Cinnamon-stone (sin-na-mōn-stōn), n. A variety of garnet of a cinnamon, hyacinth-red, yellowish brown, or honey yellow colour, sometimes used in jewelry.

Cinnamon-water (sin-na-mōn-wā-tēr), n. A medicinal beverage obtained by distilling cinnamon, first infused in barley-water, in spirit of wine, brandy, or white wine.

Cinnamyl, Cinnamyls (sin-na-mil), n. (C₉H₇O) A substance supposed to exist in a series of compounds, such as cinnamic acid, cinnamic aldehyde, &c.

Cinnyridae (sin-nir-i-dē), n. pl. [Or Cinnyria, a small bird, and cinna, thimble.] A family of insectivorous birds remarkable for the splendid metallic lustre of their plumage, the rose birds. The family derives its name from the typical genus Cinnyria. See ROSE BIRD.

Cinqus (sing), n. [Fr. cinque.] A five; a word used in games.

Cinqus-canto (chin-kwā-chen-tō), n. and a. [It. lit. 500, but used as a contraction for 1500, the century in which the revival took place.] A term employed in reference to the decorative art and architecture belonging to that attempt at purification of style and reversion to classical forms introduced soon after the beginning of the sixteenth century in Italy. The term is often loosely applied to ornament of the sixteenth century in general, properly included in the term Renaissance.

What is given the student as next to Raphael's work? Cinqus-canto ornament generally. Anders.

Cinqus-Ball (sing-k'oll), n. [Fr. cinque, L. quinque, five, and famille, L. familia, a leaf.] 1. In arch. an ornament in the pointed style of architecture, consisting of five cusped divisions. Circular windows frequently have this form. See FOIL.—2. The common name of the plant Potentilla fruticosa, from its quince leaves. Called also Five-anger.

Cinqus (sin'k'ar), n. [A corruption of ap-pus.] A fine black game, cyprus. Marston.

Cinqus-tunnel (sin'k'ar-tun-nel), n. A false chimney set on a roof for ornament. Puller.

Cipher (sif'er), n. [Or Fr. chiffre, Mod. Fr. chiffre, It. chiffra, Ar. chiffr, cipher, from Ar. chiffr, empty.] 1. In arith. a character of this form, 0, which, standing by itself, expresses nothing, but increases or diminishes the value of other figures, according to its position. In whole numbers, when placed at the right hand of a figure it increases its value tenfold, but in decimal fractions, placed at the left hand of a figure, it diminishes the value of that figure tenfold.—2. Fig. something of no value or consequence, especially a person of no weight, influence, usefulness, or decided character. 'The very cipher of a function.' Shak.

Here he was a mere cipher, there he was lord of the accident. Travels.

2. A character in general, especially a numeral character.

This system began to be written in ciphers and characters. Lockhart.

4. An intertecture of letters, as the initials of a name, engraved, stamped, or written on something, as on a seal, plate, coach, tomb, picture, &c., a literal device, a monogram.—5. A secret or disguised manner of writing, certain characters arbitrarily invented and agreed on by two or more persons, to stand for letters or words, and understood only by the persons who invent or agree to use them.—6. Anything written in cipher.—7. The key to a cipher or secret mode of writing.

Cipher (sif'er), v. t. To use figures; to practice arithmetic.

'Twas certain he could write and cipher too. Lockhart.

Cipher (sif'er), v. t. 1. To write in occult characters.—2. To designate by a sign, or characters.

Some battlement deem, the herald will converse,
To cipher me how fondly I did strive. Shak.

3. To decipher. 'The illustration, that know not how to cipher what is writ in learned books.' Shak.

Cipherer (sif'er-er), n. One who ciphers; one who practices arithmetic.

Cipherhood (sif'er-hud), n. State of being a cipher, insignificance, nothingness. [Rare.]

Therefore God, to comfort him and bring him to his native cipherhood, threatened to bring a sword against him. Lockhart.

Ciphering-book (sif'er-ing buk), n. A child's book in which to work arithmetical questions or enter them when worked.

Ciphering-plate (sif'er-ing plāt), n. A slate on which to work arithmetical questions.

Cipher-key (sif'er-kē), n. A key for deciphering writings in secret style.

Cipollin (sip'olin), n. [It. cipollina, from capula, an onion, from its being valued or struffed like an onion. See TRIO.] A green marble from Rome, containing white zones. It consists chiefly of carbonate of lime, with quartz, talc, and a small portion of iron.

Cippus (sip'pus), n. pl. Cippi (sip'pi), (L.) 1. In Rom. arch. a low column, generally rectangular and sculptured, and often bearing an inscription, serving as a sepulchral monument. 4. Alternating between. [Rare.]

The life of man is a perpetual war,
In misery and sorrow circular. Sandys.

5. In logic, ending in itself: used of a paralogism, where the second proposition at once proves the first and is proved by it. See CIRCLE, 9.—6. Addressed to a circle or to a number of persons having a common interest; as, a circular letter.—7. Complete; perfect.

A man so absolute and circular,
In all those wished-for rarities that may take A virgin captive. Masinger.

—Circular arc, an arc of a circle.—Circular instruments, astronomical or nautical instruments for measuring angles in which the graduation extends round the whole circumference of a circle, or to 360°, for instance, a mural circle.—Circular loom, a loom in which the shuttle moves in a circular race and continuously in one direction through warps arranged in a circle. E. H. Knight—Circular note, a note or letter of credit furnished by bankers to persons about to travel abroad. Along with the note the traveller receives 'a letter of indication,' bearing the names of certain foreign bankers who will cash it on presentation, on which letter he is required to write his name. On presentation the foreign banker can demand a view of the 'letter of indication,' and by requiring the presenter to write his name in his presence can compare the signature thus made with that in the letter, and so far satisfy himself whether the presenter is really the person entitled to receive the money.—Circular numbers, those whose powers terminate in the roots themselves, as 5 and 6, whose squares are 25 and 36.—Circular polarization, the name given to a supposed circular rotation in the particles of ether in certain media when a pencil of plane polarized light is allowed to pass through these media.—Circular sailing, the method of sailing by the arc of a great circle. See SAILING.—Napier's circular parts, are five parts of a right-angled or a quadrantal spherical triangle; they are the legs, the complement of the hypotenuse, and the complements of the two oblique angles. If any one part be called the middle part the two next to it are the adjacent parts, and the other two the opposite. Napier's rules for the circular parts serve for the solution of all cases of right-angled spherical triangles.

1. To place in a particular situation or condition.—2. To furnish or dress out with incidents. [Rare.]

The poet took the matters of fact as they came down to him, and circumstanced them after his own manner. Addison.

Circumstanced (sér-kum-stanst), pp. or a.
Placed in a particular manner with regard to attending facts or incidents; as, circumstanced as we were we could not escape. [Shakespeare has the expression I must be circumstanced apparently in the singular sense of I must put up with circumstances. Oth. III. 4, 201.]

Circumstant (sér-kum-stant), a. Surrounding. 'All circumstant bodies.' Sir K. Digby.

Circumstantiable (sér-kum-stan'shi-á-bl), a.
Capable of being circumstantiated. Jer. Taylor.

Circumstantial (sér-kum-stan'shal), a.
1. Attending; incidental; casual; relating to, but not essential.

All that is merely circumstantial shall be subordinated to and in keeping with what is essential. Dr. Codd.

2. Consisting in or pertaining to circumstances or to particular incidents.

The usual character of human testimony is substantial truth under circumstantial variety. Paley.

3. Abounding or invested with circumstances; exhibiting all the circumstances; minute; particular; as, a circumstantial account or recital.—Circumstantial evidence, evidence that is obtained from circumstances, which necessarily or usually attend facts of a particular nature, from which arises presumption. This mode of proof is resorted to in cases where direct proof cannot be obtained.

Circumstantial (sér-kum-stan'shal), n.
Something incidental and of subordinate importance: opposed to an essential.

Who would not prefer a religion that differs from his own in the circumstantial before one that differs from it in the essential? Addison.

Circumstantiality (sér-kum-stan'shi-ál'-tí), n.
The quality of being circumstantial; minuteness; fulness of detail; as, the circumstantiality of a story or description.

Circumstantially (sér-kum-stan'shal-lí), adv.
1. In regard to circumstances; not essentially; accidentally. [Rare.]

Of the fancy and intellect the powers are only circumstantially different. Glanville.

2. Minutely; exactly; with every circumstance or particular. 'To set down somewhat circumstantially, not only the events, but the manner of my trials.' Boyle.

Circumstantiate (sér-kum-stan'shi-át), v. t.
1. To place in particular circumstances; to invest with particular accidents or adjuncts. [Rare.]

If the act were otherwise circumstantiated, it might well that freely which now it wills reluctantly. Brownhall.

2. To place in a particular condition with regard to power or wealth. [Rare.]

A number infinitely superior and the best circumstantiated are for the succession of Hanover. Swift.

3. To confirm by circumstances; to describe circumstantially or in full detail.

Neither will time permit to circumstantiate these particulars. Hargrave.

Circumstantiate (sér-kum-stan'shi-át), a.

Circumstantly (sér-kum-stant-lí), adv.
Circumstantially; exactly. Chaloner.

Circumterrestrial (sér-kum'tér-rá'né-us), a.
[L. circum, about, and terra, earth.] Around the earth; being or dwelling around the earth. Hallywell. [Rare.]

Circumundulate (sér-kum-un-dó-lát), v. t.

Circumvallate (sér-kum-val'át), v. t. [L. circumvallo, to wall round—circum, round, and vallo, to fortify with a rampart, from vallum, a rampart.] To surround with a rampart. Johnson.

Circumvallation (sér-kum-val'át'shon), n.
[See above.] In fort. (a) the art or act of casting up fortifications to protect an investing or besieging army from attacks in the rear. (b) A line of field-works consisting of a rampart or parapet with a trench, surrounding a besieged place or the camp of a besieging army.

A few hours after Bouffiers had entered the place the besieging forces closed round it on every side; the lines of circumvallation were rapidly formed. Macaulay.

Circumvection (sér-kum-vek'shon), n. [L. circum, about, and veho, to carry.] A carrying about. Johnson.

Circumvent (sér-kum-vent), v. t. [L. circumvenio, circumventum—circum, about, and venio, to come.] To gain advantage over by artfulness, stratagem, or deception; to defeat or get the better of by cunning; to outwit; to overreach; as, to circumvent one's enemies. 'Circumvented thus by fraud.' Milton.

It might be the pate of a politician . . . one that would circumvent God, might it not? Shak.

Circumvention (sér-kum-ven'shon), n.
1. The act of circumventing; the act of outwitting or overreaching; deception; fraud; stratagem. 'A school in which he learned sly circumvention.' Cowper.—2. Means of circumventing. Shak. [Rare.]—3. In Scots law, an act of fraud or deceit.

Circumventive (sér-kum-vent'iv), a.
Tending or designed to circumvent; deceiving by artifices; deluding.

Circumventor (sér-kum-vent'ér), n.
1. One who circumvents or gains his purpose by cunning or wiles.

Your majesty now of late hath found . . . the said Thomas Cromwell, Earl of Essex, . . . to be the most false and corrupt traitour, deceiver, and circumventor against your most royal person. Bp. Burnet.

2. A surveying instrument, having a compass-box at the top for taking angles. See CIRCUMFERENTOR.

Circumversion (sér-kum-ver'shon), n. [L. circum, round, and verito, verum, to turn.] A turning about. Holland.

Circumvest (sér-kum-vest), v. t. [L. circumvestio—circum, round, and vestio, to clothe.] To cover round, as with a garment. Reliquiae Wottonianae.

Circumvolation (sér-kum-vó-lá'shon), n. [L. circumvolo—circum, around, and volo, to fly.] The act of flying round. [Rare.]

Circumvolution (sér-kum-vó-lú'shon), n.
[See below.] 1. The act of rolling round.

Stable, without circumvolution;
Eternal rest. Dr. H. More.

2. The state of being rolled round or wound into a roll.

The twisting of the guts is really either a circumvolution or insertion of one part of the gut within the other. Arbuthnot.

3. One of the windings of a thing wound or twisted; a convolution.—4. Fig. a winding; a roundabout method of procedure.

He had neither time nor temper for sentimental circumvolutions. Disraeli.

Circumvolve (sér-kum-volv'), v. t. [L. circumvolvo—circum, round, and volvo, to roll.] To turn or cause to roll round; to cause to revolve. 'Whence'er we circumvolv our eyes.' Herriek.

To ascribe to each sphere an intelligence to circumvolve it were unphilosophical. Glanville.

Circumvolve (sér-kum-volv'), v. i.
To roll round; to revolve. Dr. E. Darwin.

Circus (sér-kus), n. pl. Circuses (sér-kus-éz). [L. circus; hence circo (which see).] 1. In Rom. antiqu. a large oblong building, adapted for horse-races, chariot-races, and for the exhibition of athletic exercises, contests with wild beasts, &c., and furnished with rows of seats, rising one above another for the accommodation of spectators.—2. In modern times, a place of amusement, where feats of horsemanship and acrobatic displays form the principal entertainment; also the company of performers in a circus, with their equipage.—3. Inclosed space of any kind; circuit.

The narrow circus of my dungeon wall. Byron.

Circo-sceat, † n. [A. Sax. = church-sceot.] An ancient ecclesiastical due, paid mostly in corn, on St. Martin's day; church-sceot.

Cirli-bunting (sér'l'bunt-ing), n. [It. zirlo, from zirlare, to twitter.] A bird of the genus Emberiza, the E. cirrus (Linn.).

Cirque (sér'k), n. [Fr., a circle, a circus.] 1. A circus. [Poetical.]

See the cirque falls! the unpillar'd temple nods. Pope.

2. A circle; specifically, a circle regarded as inclosing any space or surrounding any object or group of objects. [Poetical.]

Pored on its hazel cirque of shedded leaves. Keats.

3. A name often given to a kind of circular valley in mountains due to atmospheric, chiefly glacier, denudation.

Cirrhopoda (sir-rôp'ô-dâ), n. pl. Same as Cirripedia (which see).

Cirrhosis (sir-rô'sis), n. [Gr. kirrhos, orange-tawny.] In pathol. (a) a yellow colouring matter, sometimes secreted in the tissues, especially in the liver, owing to a morbid process. (b) A disease consisting of diminution and deformity of the liver, which becomes dense, granulated, and wrinkled, and frequently of a rust-brown colour. Cirrhosis is popularly named 'nutmeg liver' from its peculiar appearance, and 'drunkard's liver' from this lesion being frequently caused by intemperance.

Cirrhostomi, Cirrhostomida (sir-rô'stô-mi, sir-rô'stô-mi-dé), n. pl. See CIRROSTOMI.

Cirrhotic (sir-rô'tik), a. Affected with or having the character of cirrhosis.

Cirrhous, Cirrhose (sir'rus, sir'rôse), a. [L. cirrus, a tendril.] See CIRROSE.

Cirribranch, Cirribranchiate (sir'ri-brang, sir'ri-brang'ki-ât), a. [L. cirrus, a tendril, and branchia, gills.] Having tendril-like gills: a term applied to certain molluscs.

Cirri (sir'ri), n. pl. of cirrus.

Cirriferous (sir-rif'er-us), a. [L. cirrus, a tendril, and fero, to bear.] Possessing cirri; cirriferous.

Cirriform (sir'ri-form), a. [L. cirrus, a tendril, and forma, form.] Formed like a tendril.

Cirrigerosus (sir-ri-jér-us), a. [L. cirrus, a tendril, and gero, to carry.] Same as Cirri-ferous.

Cirrigrade (sir'ri-grád), a. [L. cirrus, a tendril, and gradior, to go.] Moving by means of tendril-like appendages; as, cirrigrade Acalephe. Carpenter.

Cirriped (sir'ri-ped), n. A member of the Cirripedia.

Cirripedia, Cirripedia (sir-ri-pé'di-a), n. pl. [L. cirrus, a tendril, and pes, pedis, the foot.] An order of lower crustaceous animals, formerly ranked among the molluscs, so called from the cirri or filaments with which their transformed feet are fringed. When young they are free and able to swim, possessing certain limbs, eyes, and organs, which they subsequently lose, and are altogether of higher organization than when adult. When adult they are affixed to some substance, either set directly on it, as in the genus Balanus; placed on a foot-stalk, as the barnacle, or goose-mussel; or sunk into the supporting substance, as the whale-barnacle. Called also Cirrhopoda.

Cirro-cumulus (sir-rô-kû'mû-lus), n. [L. cirrus, a tuft of hair, and cumulus, a heap.] A form of cloud. See CLOUD.

Cirrose (sir'rôse), a. [L. cirrosus, from cirrus, a curl.] In bot. (a) having a cirrus or tendril; specifically, applied to a leaf tipped with a tendril. (b) Resembling tendrils or coiling like them. Written also Cirrhose, Cirrhous, and Cirrouse.

Cirrostromi (sir-rô'stô-mi), n. pl. [L. cirrus, a hair, and Gr. stoma, mouth.] A term applied to an order of fishes (otherwise named Pharyngobranchii or Leptocardi), represented by the lancelet or amphioxus, the lowest fish. In this fish the mouth is surrounded by hair-like filaments. Called also Cirrhostomida.

Cirro-stratus (sir-rô-strá'tus), n. [L. cirrus, a tuft of hair, and stratus, spread flat.] A species of cloud. See CLOUD.

Cirrous (sir'rus), a. Same as Cirrose.

Cirrus (sir'rus), n. pl. Cirri (sir'ri). [L.] 1. In bot. a tendril; a long thread-like organ by which a plant climbs.—2. In zool. a soft curled filamentary appendage to the feet of certain animals, as barnacles, and the jaws of certain fishes.—3. A form of cloud. See CLOUD.

Cirsium (sér'si-um), n. [Gr. kirson, a kind of thistle.] See HORSE-THISTLE.

Cirsocele (sér'sô-sel), n. [Gr. kirsoe, a dilated vein, and kêlê, a tumour.] A varix, or dilatation of the spermatic vein; hernia varicosa.

Cis (sis), n. [Gr. kis, a wood-worm.] A genus of coleopterous insects, of the family Xylophaga. Some are minute beetles which infest the various species of Boleti or mushrooms. The larvae of others do much harm to books, furniture, wood of houses, &c., by piercing them with small holes. Those which perforate books are popularly known as book-worms.

Cis (sis), n. A Latin preposition signifying 'on this side,' often prefixed to the names of rivers, mountains, &c., to form adjectives. Rome was considered the point of departure in words of Roman origin.

Cisalpine (sis-al'pin or sis-al'pin), a. [L. cis, on this side, and Alpes, Alps, whence alpinus, alpine.] On this side of the Alps, with regard to Rome; that is, on the south of the Alps: opposed to transalpine.

Cisatlantic (sis-at-lan'tik), a. Being on this side of the Atlantic Ocean.

Cisco (sir'kô), n. A fish of the herring kind, found in Lake Ontario.

Ciselure (sêz-lûr), n. [Fr. ciseler, to carve or engrave with a chisel.] 1. The art or operation of chasing.—2. Chased metal work. Fairholt.

Cislen (sis'lê-ô), n. See CHISLEU.

Cismontane (sis-mon'tân), a. [L. cis, on this side, and mons, a mountain.] Existing on this side of the mountain; specifically, on this side of the Alps: opposed to ultramontane.

Cispadane (sis-pa-dân), a. [L. cis, on this side, and Padus, the river Po, whence Padanus.] On this side of the Po, with regard to Rome; that is, on the south side.

Cissampelos (sis-am'pel-os), n. [Gr. kissos, ivy, and ampelos, a vine, because it climbs like the ivy, and has fruit like the vine.] A genus of climbing plants, nat. order Menispermaceae, one of which, the velvet leaf (C. Pereira), yields the root called Pereira bark, used in medicine as a tonic and diuretic.

Cissoid (sis-soid), n. [Gr. kissos, ivy, and eidos, form.] A curve of the second order, invented by Diocles with a view to the solution of the famous problem of the duplication of the cube, or the insertion of two mean proportionals between two given straight lines. The curve is generated in the following manner:—In the diameter, A B, of a circle, take B M = A M, and erect the ordinates M Q = N R, and join A Q: the locus of the point P, in which the line A Q cuts the ordinate N R, is the cissoid. To find its equation, let A N = x, P N = y, A C = a, then since the equation is $y^2(2a - x) = x^3$. The curve has an equal branch on the other side of A B; the two branches meeting in a cusp at the point A, and have the line H K as an asymptote. The area included between the curve and the asymptote is three times the area of the generating circle. In the cissoid of Diocles the generating curve is a circle; but this term has been employed in later times to all curves described in a similar manner, where the generating curve is not a circle.

Cissoidal (sis-soid'al), a. Resembling the cissoid of Diocles, applied to mechanical curves partaking of that character.

Cissus (sis'sus), n. [Gr. kissos, ivy, in reference to their scrambling roots.] The wild grape, a group of plants included in the same genus with the true vine, but having more deeply divided leaves, and the petals of the flower opening before they fall off. All the species are climbing plants, and are mostly found within the tropics, especially in Asia; a few occur in North America.

Cist (sist), n. [From L. cista, Gr. kistê, a chest. Chest is simply another form of this word.] 1. A case; a chest; a basket; specifically, in archæol. (a) the term applied to the mystic baskets used in processions connected with the Eleusinian mysteries. (b) A place of internment of an early or prehistoric period, consisting of a stone chest formed of two parallel rows of stones fixed on their ends, and covered by similar flat stones. Such cists are found in barrows or mounds, including bones. In rocky districts, cists were sometimes hewn in the rock itself.

Cist.

Called also Kist, Cistvaen, and Kistvaen.—2. Same as Cyst (which see).

Cistaceae (sis-tâ'sê-ê), n. pl. [See CISTRUS.] A nat. order of polypetalous exogens, consisting of low shrubby plants or herbs, with entire leaves and crumpled, generally ephemeral showy flowers. Some species exude a balsamic resin, such as ladanum, from a species of Cistus found in the countries bordering the Levant. Four species of the genus Hellanthemum are found in Britain, and are commonly called rock-rose.

Cistal (sis'tal), a. A term used by Lindley to designate one of his 'alliances' of plants. They are hypogynous exogens, with monodichlamydeous flowers, and include the rock-roses (genus Cistus), crucifers, weldworts, and capparids.

Cistella (sis-tel'la), n. [L., a casket, dim. of cista, a box.] In bot. the capsular shield of some lichens.

Cistercian (sis-têr'shi-an), n. A member of a religious order, which takes its name from its original convent, Cîteaux (Cistercienn), near Dijon, where the society was founded in 1088 by Robert, abbot of Solsmes, under the rule of St. Benedict. They led a contemplative and very ascetic life, and, having emancipated themselves from the oversight of the bishops, formed a sort of religious republic, under the government of a high council of twenty-five members, the abbot of Cîteaux being president. In France they called themselves Bernardines, in honour of St. Bernard. From the Cistercians emanated the barefooted monks, or Feuillants in France, the nuns of Port-Royal, the Recollets in Spain, and the monks of La Trappe. The French Revolution reduced the Cistercians to a few convents in Spain, Austria, Poland, and the Saxon part of Upper Lusatia. They wear a white cassock with black ascupary, but when officiating are clothed with a large white gown, with great sleeves and a hood of the same colour.

Cistern (sis'tern), n. [L. cisterna, from cista, a chest.] 1. An artificial reservoir or receptacle for holding water, beer, or other liquor, as in domestic uses, distilleries, and breweries.—2. A natural reservoir for water; a hollow place containing water, as a fountain or lake. 'The wide cisterns of the lakes.' Sir R. Blackmore.

Cistic (sist'ik), a. See Cystic.

Cistus (sis'tus), n. [Gr. kistos.] The rock-rose, a genus of plants of many species, belonging to the nat. order Cistaceae, natives of Europe, or of the countries bordering the Mediterranean. Some of them are beautiful evergreen flowering shrubs, and ornamental in gardens. Gum ladanum is obtained from C. creticus and C. ladaniferus.

Cistvaen, Kistvaen (kist'va-en or kist'ván), n. See CIST.

Cit (sit), n. [Contracted from citizen.] A citizen; an inhabitant of a city: used in disparagement. 'The cits of London and the booms of Middlesex.' Johnson. [Colloq.]

Citable (sit'a-bl), a. Capable of being cited or quoted.

Citadel (sit'a-del), n. [Fr. citadelle, from itis, city.] A fortress or castle in or near a city, intended to keep the inhabitants in subjection, or, in case of a siege, to form a final point of defence. 'Troas and Ilium's columned citadel.' Tennyson.

Cital (sit'al), n. 1. The act of citing to appear; a summons. [Rare.]—2. Mention. [Rare.] He made a blushing cital of himself. Shak.

3.† Quotation; citation. Johnson.

Citation (sit'á-shon), n. [L. citatio, from cito, to cite (which see).] 1. A summons; an official call or notice given to a person to appear in a court, and answer to a demand; a call or notice to appear, in various other cases, and the paper containing such notice or call.

The remonstrants were ready according to their citation. Sir M. Hale.

2. The act of citing a passage from a book; or from another person, in his own words; also the passage or words quoted; quotation.

It is the beauty and independent worth of the citations, far more than their appropriateness, which have made Johnson's dictionary popular even as a reading book. Coleridge.

3. Specifically, in law, a reference to decided cases or books of authority to maintain a point of law.—4.† Enumeration; mention. Harvey.

Citator (sit'á-tér), n. One who cites. [Rare.]

Citatory (sit'a-to-ri), a. Citing; calling; having the power or form of citation. 'Let-ters citatory.' Aylife.

Cite (sit), v.t. pret. & pp. cited; ppr. citing, [Fr. citer, from L. cito, citare, freq. of cico, to call, to summon.] 1. To call upon officially or authoritatively to appear; to summon before a person or tribunal; to give legal or official notice to appear in court to answer or defend.

The cited dead
Of all past ages, to the general doom
Shall hasten. Milton.

2. To enjoin; to direct; to summon; to call; to order or urge; to rouse. [Rare.]

And had I not been cited so by them
Yet did I purpose as they do entreat. Shak.

3. To quote; to name or repeat, as a passage or the words of another, either from a book or from verbal communication.

The devil can cite Scripture for his purpose. Shak.

4. To refer to in support, proof, or confirmation; as, to cite an authority or a precedent in proof of a point in law.—5.† To mention; to recount.

We cite our faults
That they may hold excused our lawless lives. Shak.

6.† To bespeak; to argue; to evidence. 'Aged honour cites a virtuous youth.' Shak.

Citee, Citei, n. A city. Chaucer.

Citer (sit'er), n. One who cites: (a) one who summons into court. (b) One who quotes.

Citees (sit'es), n. [See CIT.] A city woman. Dryden. [Rare.]

Cithara (sit'h-a-ra), n. [L. from Gr. ithara, whence cithern, gittern, guitar.] An ancient stringed instrument resembling the more modern cittern, or guitar. It is mentioned by Homer.

Citharexylon (sit'h-a-reks'-lon), n. [Gr. ithara, the lyre, and zydon, wood.] Fiddle-wood, a genus of plants, nat. order Verbenaceae. The species are trees or shrubs, natives of South America and Jamaica.

Citharist (sit'h-ar-ist), n. A player on the cithara.

Citharistic (sit'h-ar-ist'ik), a. Pertaining to or adapted to the cithara.

Cithern (sit'h'érn), n. Same as Cittern (which see).

Citicism (sit'is-izm), n. [From cit.] The manners of a cit or citizen. B. Jonson. [Rare.]

Citled (sit'id), a. 1. Belonging to a city; having the qualities of a city. 'The loathsome airs of smoky citled towns.' Drayton. [Rare.]—2. Occupied by a city or cities; covered with cities. 'The citled earth.' Keats.

Citigrade (sit'i-grád), a. [L. citrus, swift, and gradus, a step.] Swiftly moving, specifically applied to a tribe of spiders remarkable for the nimbleness of their motions.

Citiner (sit'in-ér), n. One born or bred in a city; a cit. Chapman.

Citizen (sit'i-zen), n. [O.E. citesein, cite-zein, citesain, &c., from O. Fr. citeain, citain, citeien, &c. (Mod. Fr. citoyen), from cité, a city. The z (or s) is a corruption of the old symbol used for y. See CITY.] 1. The native of a city, or an inhabitant who enjoys the freedom and privileges of the city in which he resides; the freeman of a city, as distinguished from a foreigner, or one not entitled to its franchise.—2. Any inhabitant of a town or city, as opposed to the inhabitant of a rural district; sometimes, in disparagement, a person engaged in trade, as opposed to a person of birth and breeding.

3. A member of a state with full political privileges.

If the citizens of the United States should not be free and happy the fault will be entirely their own. Washington.

Citizen (sit'i-zen), a. Having the qualities of a citizen; town-bred; effeminate. [Rare.]

I am not . . . so citizen a wanton as to seem to die ere sick. Shak.

Citizeness (sit'i-zen-es), n. A female citizen.

Citizenize (sit'i-zen-iz), v.t. To make a citizen; to admit to the rights and privileges of a citizen. [Rare.]

Talleyrand was citizenized in Pennsylvania when there in the form of an emigrant. T. Pickering.

Citizenship (sit'i-zen-ship), n. The state of being vested with the rights and privileges of a citizen.

Our citizenship, as saith the apostle, is in heaven. Horne.

Citizen-soldier (sit'i-zen-sól-jér), n. One who is both a citizen or a civilian and a soldier, as the volunteers of Great Britain.

Citolet (sit'ól), n. [O.Sp. citola, a cithern.] A musical instrument; a dulcimer.

Citrate (sit'rát), n. [L. citrus, a citron or lemon.] In chem. a salt of citric acid.

Citrean (sit'ré-an), a. Citrine.

Citric (sit'rik), a. Belonging to or derived from lemons or citrons.—Citric acid (C₆H₈O₇), the acid of lemons. Citric acid is contained in several fruits, but in the largest quantity in limes and lemons, the latter containing about 54 per cent. It is colourless, inodorous, and extremely sharp in its taste. It is used as a discharge in calico-printing, and as a substitute for lemon in making saline draughts.

Citril-finch (sit'ril-finsh), n. [A corruption of the specific name meaning lemon-yellow, from L. citrus, a citron.] A beautiful song-bird of Italy (Fringilla citrinella): so called from the colour of its breast.

Citriation (sit-ri-ná-shon), n. The process of becoming of the colour of citrine; the state of being so coloured.

Citrine (sit'rin), a. [L. citrinus, from citrus, a lemon or citron.] Like a citron or lemon; of a lemon colour; yellow or greenish-yellow.—Citrine ointment, the common name of the ointment of nitrate of mercury. It consists of 4 parts of mercury, 12 nitric acid, 15 prepared lead, and 82 olive-oil.

Citrine (sit'rin), n. 1. Lemon colour.—2. A yellow pellucid variety of quartz. Dana.

Citron (sit'ron), n. [Fr. citron; L. citreum, from citrus, the lemon or citron.] The fruit of the citron-tree, a large species of lemon; the tree itself.

Citron-tree (sit'ron-tré), n. The tree which produces the citron (Citrus medica). It has an upright smooth stem, with a branchy head, rising from 5 to 15 feet, adorned with large, oval, spear-shaped leaves.

Citron-water (sit'ron-wá-tér), n. A liquor distilled from the rind of citrons.

Citrul, Citrulle (sit'rul), n. [See CITRULLUS.] The water-melon (Cucumis Citrullus), so named from its yellow colour.

Citrullus (sit'rul'us), n. [A dim. formed from the L. citrus, the citron-tree: so called from the colour of the fruit when cut.] A genus of dicotyledonous, herbaceous, annual plants, nat. order Cucurbitaceae. C. Colocynthis yields the well-known cathartic drug called colocynth (which see).

Citrus (sit'rus), n. [L.] A genus of plants, nat. order Aurantiaceae, consisting of trees, with apparently simple, ovate, acuminate leaves, which are leaflets united by a distinct joint to the leaf-like stalk. The numerous stamens are irregularly united by their filaments into several irregular bundles. The fruit is pulpy, with a spongy rind. To this genus belong the orange, lemon, citron, &c.

Cittern (sit'térn), n. [From L. cithara. See CITHARA.] An old instrument of the guitar kind, strung with wire instead of gut. It had frequently a head grotesquely carved at the extremity of the neck and finger-board, which explains several allusions in our old plays; while the fact that in barbers' shops there was regularly one or more citterns for the use of the customers explains others. Written also Cithern.

City (sit'i), n. [Fr. cité; It. città; L. civitas, civitas, a city, state, from civis, a citizen.] 1. In a general sense, a large and important town; any town holding an important position in the state in which it is situated; in a narrower sense and as regards Great Britain, a city is said to be a town corporate that is or has been the seat of a bishop and of a cathedral church. Yet (as is remarked in Stephen's Commentaries) there seems to be no necessary connection between a city and a see; possibly the words were popularly thought to be etymologically connected. In America a city is a town incorporated and governed by a mayor and aldermen. The word is often used, like town, in opposition to country.—2. The inhabitants of a city collectively.

I do suspect I have done some offence
That seems disgraceful in the city's eyes. Shak.

The name common to various viscid earths, compounds of silica and alumina, sometimes with lime, magnesia, soda or potash, and metallic oxides. All the varieties are characterized by being firmly coherent, weighty, compact, and hard when dry, but stiff, viscid, and ductile when moist; smooth to the touch; not readily diffusible in water, and when mixed not readily subsiding in it. They contract by heat. Clays absorb water greedily, and become soft, but are so tenacious as to be moulded into any shape, and hence they are the materials of bricks and tiles, pottery, &c. There are many varieties of clay used for different purposes, as pipe-clay, potter's clay, brick clay, porcelain clay, &c.—2. In poetry and in Script. earth in general, especially as the material of the human body.

I also am formed out of the clay. Job xxxiii. 6.
Their spirits conquered when their clay was cold. By Beattie.

—Kimmeridge clay, Oxford clay, Weald clay. See these terms in their alphabetical places.—Clay iron-ore, clay ironstone, one of the most valuable of the ferrous rocks, from which iron is procured in great abundance. It occurs chiefly in the coal-measures of Scotland, Staffordshire, Shropshire, and Wales.

Clay-slate (klā'slāt), n. In geol. a rock consisting of clay which has been hardened and otherwise changed, for the most part extremely fissile, and often affording good roofing slates. In colour it varies from greenish or bluish-gray to lead colour. The cleavage is independent of the stratification. It rarely lies parallel to the bedding, generally crossing the strata at all angles. If a piece of slate be examined it will be found possible to continue the division until very thin scales are obtained. This peculiar structure is known as slaty cleavage. This rock, in Scotland, is characteristic of the Silurian formation.

Clay-stone (klā'stōn), n. An earthy feldstone or felspathic rock of the igneous group; its harder varieties being formerly known as compact felspar. Its texture is porous, compact, or slaty. Its colour is white, gray, yellow, or blue; also rose or pale red, or brownish red, and sometimes greenish.

Cleavage (klév'áj), n. 1. The act of cleaving or splitting; the act of separating or dividing off. — 2. In mineral and geol. the manner in which substances regularly cleave or split. It is used in relation to the fracture of minerals which have natural joints and possess a regular structure. Certain rocks, as slate-rocks in the strictest sense, may be cleaved into an indefinite number of thin laminae which are parallel to each other, but which may be, but generally are not, parallel to the planes of the true strata or layers of deposition. Cleavage is the result of an operation which is subsequent to, and entirely independent of, the original stratification of the rocks. In reference to mineral crystals cleavage is called basal, cubic, diagonal, or lateral (or perpendicular) according as it is parallel to the base of a crystal, to the faces of a cube, to a diagonal plane, or to the lateral planes.

Cleaved (klév'), v. t. pret. cleave or cleaved; pp. cleaved, ppr. cleaving. [A. Sax. clifan, cleofan, pret. clifode, pp. clifode (cleaved) is therefore historically the correct pret. & pp.; cog. D. and L.G. kleven, Dan. klæbe, G. kleben, to adhere, to cleave. Cleaved is a nasalized form akin to this.] 1. To stick; to adhere; to be attached: used both in a literal and figurative sense. "If any blot hath cleaved to mine hands." Job xxxi. 7. "Who loved one only and who cleave to her." Tennyson.

Cnidin, Cnidin (kní'dín), n. [L. cnidus, a plant of the thistle kind.] A crystalline matter found in Cnidus benedictus and various other plants. It is neutral and bitter, and very similar to columbicine. It is composed of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen.

Cnidus (kní'dus), n. A genus of thistle-like composites, with hard-spined involucrum. The best known species is C. benedictus, a native of the Levant and Persia, formerly used in medicine as a tonic or diaphoretic.

Cnidin (kní'dín), n. pl. The urticating cells or "thorn-cells" whereby many ctenostemata animals obtain their power of stinging. H. A. Nicholson.

Cn., Cul., Cum., Cum., Cum., Cum. A Latin

prefix, used almost exclusively in words of Latin origin, a modification of cum, with, and signifying with, together, jointly, mutually, at the same time, union of parts, and the like, its form varying with the letter or sound that follows. See Cum.

Conserve (kón-sér-vé), v. t. [L. conservare—prefix con, and servare, to keep up, from servare, a heap.] To keep up; to pile. Howell. [Rare.]

Conserve (kón-sér-vé), n. [L. conservare.] Heaped, raised into a pile; collected into a crowd. Shillingford. [Rare.]

Conservation (kón-sér-vá-shon), n. The act of heaping, or state of being heaped together. Shillingford. [Rare.]

Coach (kóch), n. [Fr. coche, from Hung. koest (pron. ko-chi), from Koss, the name of a place in Hungary, the name and invention having come to France from Hungary; Q. betsele.] 1 A vehicle drawn by horses, and designed for the conveyance of passengers, more particularly a four-wheeled close vehicle of considerable size. 2 An old name of an apartment in a large ship of war, near the stern and beneath the poop-deck, usually occupied by the captain.

The commander came on board and the cannon out to the coach. Pepp.

3 A private tutor, generally employed to train a person for a specific examination. 'A coach or crammer from the Circumlocution Office.' Duchess. [Slang or colloq.]

Coach (kóch), v. t. 1 To carry in a coach.—2 To prepare for an examination by private instruction. 'Sometimes coaching a stray gentleman's son at Cambridge or Kington.' Thackeray. [Slang or colloq.]

Coach (kóch), v. i. To ride or travel in a coach.

Coach-box (kóch'box), n. The seat on which the driver of a coach sits.

Coach-carrier (kóch'kár-er), n. The tradesman who supplies and makes the leather parts of coaches.

Coach-dog (kóch'dog), n. A dog of Dalmatian breed of handsome form, and generally white spotted with black, kept as an attendant upon carriages.

Coachman (kóch'mán), n. A coach-driver [Slang.]

They are out again and up; coach the last, gathering the reins into his hands. Pepp.

Coach-fellow (kóch'fel-ló), n. 1 A horse which draws a coach along with another; a yoke-fellow.—2 One intimately connected with another; a close companion.

I have granted upon my good friends for these repairs, for you and your coach-fellow Nym. Shak.

Coach-founder (kóch'found-ér), n. One who makes the framework or ironwork of carriages.

Coachful (kóch'fúl), n. As many in a coach as it will hold.

Coach-jointer (kóch'join-ér), n. A workman who does the jointer-work of carriages.

Coachman (kóch'mán), n. The person who drives a coach.

Coachmanship (kóch'mán-ship), n. Skill in driving coaches.

Coach-master (kóch'mas-tér), n. One who owns or lets carriages.

Coach-office (kóch'of-ís), n. A booking-office for stage-coach passengers and parcels.

Coach-stand (kóch'stánd), n. A place where coaches stand for hire.

Coach-trimmer (kóch'trim-ér), n. A workman who prepares and finishes the lace, linings, and other trimmings for carriage-builders.

Coast (kó-ast), v. t. [L. coastus, a frog, from coepo, coastus—prefix co, and epo, to lead or drive.] To compel, to force. 'The inhabitants were coerced to render the city.' Sir H. Hall.

Coast (kó-ast), v. i. [Prefix co, and ast.] To act together. 'If I tell you how these two did coast.' Shak.

Coastion (kó-ast-ion), n. [L. coastio.] Force, compulsion either in restraining or impelling.

All outward motion is contrary to the nature of liberty. Sp. Barrow.

Coastive (kó-ast-iv), a. 1 [From coast, to force.] Forcing, compulsory; having the power to impel or restrain.

The clergy have no coastive power, even over heretics. Sp. Barrow.

2 [From coast, to act together.] Acting in concert.

What's the coast then coast act. Shak.

Coastively (kó-ast-iv-ly), adv. In a coastive manner.

Coactivity (kó-ast-iv-ty), n. Unity of action. Dr. H. Hall.

Co-adaptation (kó-ad-ápt-á-shon), n. [Prefix co, and adaptation.] Mutual or reciprocal adaptation. Owen.

Co-adapted (kó-ad-ápt-ed), a. Mutually or reciprocally adapted; as, co-adapted july and tooth. Owen.

Coadjunction (kó-ad-ják-shon), n. [Prefix co, and adjunction.] Adjunction or nearness of several things to each other, state of being coadjunct. [Rare.]

The sense of his Arctian's companions is that there are four modes of association, namely, by proximity in time, by similarity by contrast, by resemblance in space, or three, if proximity in time and resemblance in space be taken under one head. Pop. Ling.

Coadjunct (kó-ad-ják-shon), n. [Prefix co, and adjunct.] Mutually adjacent, near each other, as the islands are coadjunct.

Coadjutant (kó-ad-ják-shon), n. [Prefix co, and adjutant.] Mutual assistance. Johnson. [Rare.]

Coadjustment (kó-ad-ják-shon), n. [Prefix co, and adjustment.] Mutual or reciprocal adjustment.

Coadjutant (kó-ad-ják-shon), n. [L. co, and adjutant, helping.] Helping, mutually assisting or operating. J. Phillips. [Rare.]

Coadjuting (kó-ad-ják-shon), n. and a. Mutually or reciprocally assisting, mutually helping, co-operating. Drayton.

Coadjutive (kó-ad-ják-shon), a. Mutually assisting, coadjutant. 'A coadjutive cause.' Pepp. [Rare.]

Coadjutor (kó-ad-ják-shon), n. [L. coadjutor, from prefix co, and adjutor, a helper, from adjuvare, to help.] One who aids another; an assistant, a fellow-helper, an associate in operation. 'Craftily outwitting her perjured coadjutor.' Shakespeare.—2 One who is empowered or appointed to perform the duties of another. Johnson. Specifically—

3 The assistant of a bishop or other prelate.—Coadjutor, Superior. Both of these are assistants to bishops, but the coadjutor is appointed as assistant and successor to an old and infirm bishop, to relieve him from work, the superior is assistant to a bishop whose see is too large, and has charge of a specific portion of it, the bishop-primate.

The word is also applied to one of the natural orders of plants (Conductite) proposed by Linnaeus, including the genera Anaca, Magnolia, &c.

Conduction, Conductation (kó-ad-ápt-á-shon, kó-ad-ápt-á-shon), n. [See above.] The union of different substances in one mass. [Rare.]

They are some of a church, where there is no coadjutor, no superior, no government. For. Taylor.

Coadvantage (kó-ad-ván-táj), n. [Prefix co, and advantage.] An advantage in which two or more are sharers.

Coadvantageur (kó-ad-ván-táj-ér), n. A fellow-advantageur.

Coaffort (kó-af-fór-tat), v. t. [Prefix co, and affort.] To convert into a forest, or add to a forest.

Henry Fitz-Stephen did coaffort much land, which contained all his reign, though much reclaimed. Hume.

Coagency (kó-á-jen-á), n. [Prefix co, and agency.] Joint agency. Coleridge.

Coagent (kó-á-jen-t), n. [Prefix co, and agent.] An assistant or associate in an act.

Coagitate (kó-á-jít-á), v. t. [Prefix co, and agitate.] To move or agitate together. Shillingford.

Coagument (kó-á-jen-t), v. t. [L. coagumentum, to join or cement—prefix co, and agumentum, to compact body, from ago, to drive.] To coagulate or heap together. Shillingford.

Coagmentation† (kô-ag'men-tâ'shon), n. Collection into a mass or united body; union; conjunction. 'Coagmentation of words.' B. Jonson.

Coagulability (kô-ag'û-la-bil'i-ti), n. The capacity of being coagulated.

Coagulable (kô-ag'û-la-bl), a. [See COAGULATE.] Capable of becoming coagulated; capable of congealing or changing from a liquid to an inspissated state; as, coagulable lymph.

Coagulant (kô-ag'û-lant), n. That which produces coagulation.

Coagulate, Coagulate† (kô-ag'û-lât, kô-ag'û-lât), p. and a. Coagulated; curdled. 'O'erized with coagulate gore.' Shak.

Coagulate (kô-ag'û-lât), v.t. pret. & pp. coagulated; ppr. coagulating. [L. coagulo, coagulum, from coagulum, rennet, from con, together, and ago, to bring, drive, &c.] 1. To curdle; to congeal; to change from a fluid into a curd-like or inspissated solid mass; as, to coagulate blood; rennet coagulates milk.—2. To crystallize.

Coagulate (kô-ag'û-lât), v.i. 1. To curdle or congeal.

Spirit of wine commixed with milk, a third part spirit of wine, and two parts milk, coagulates little, but mingled. Bacon.

2. To become crystallized.

Coagulation (kô-ag'û-lâ'shon), n. 1. The act of changing from a fluid to a thickened curd-like state, well exemplified by the 'clotting' of blood; the state of being coagulated.—2. The change from a fluid to any solid state, as to a crystalline state.—3. The body or substance formed by coagulation.

Coagulative (kô-ag'û-lâ-tiv), a. Having the power to cause coagulation. 'Coagulative power.' Boyle.

Coagulator (kô-ag'û-lâ-tér), n. That which causes coagulation.

Coagulatory (kô-ag'û-lâ-to-ri), a. Tending to coagulate.

Coagulum (kô-ag'û-lum), n. [See COAGULATE.] 1. A coagulated mass, as curd, &c.; specifically, in med. a blood-clot.—2. A substance that causes coagulation, as rennet; a coagulant. Crabb.

Co-aid (kô'âid), n. A fellow-helper; conjunctive assistance. Pope.

Coaita (kô'it-â), n. [Native name.] A South American monkey (Ateles paniscus), about 18 inches in length. See ATELES. Spelled also Coaitis and Quata.

Coak (kôk), n. [Written also Cog, Cogg, and probably same as cog in cog-wheel.] 1. In ship-carp. a small cylinder of hard-wood let into the ends of pieces of wood intended to be joined, by which means the joining is rendered more secure.—2. Naut. the metal hole in a sheave through which the pin runs.

Coak (kôk), v.t. In ship-carp. to unite together, as two pieces of wood in the centre, by means of coaks or hard-wood pins.

Coak (kôk), n. Same as Coke.

Coal (kôl), n. [A. Sax. col; cog, D. kool, Dan. kul, Icei. and Sw. kol, G. kohle; root meaning not known.] 1. A piece of wood or other combustible substance ignited, burning, or charred; charcoal; a cinder. 'Could burn us all into one coal.' Shak. 'As when cheese is made of curds, or coals of wood.' Bacon.

2. A solid, opaque, inflammable substance found in the earth, largely employed as fuel, and formed from vast masses of vegetable matter deposited through the luxuriant growth of plants in former epochs of the earth's history. It is generally divided into three chief kinds—anthracite or glance-coal, black or bituminous coal, and brown-coal or lignite; under which divisions are included many varieties. The kind most common in this country is known as slate-coal, under which name again are included such varieties as caking-coal, cherry-coal, soft coal, hard coal or splint-coal. Cannel-coal or gas-coal is also a common variety. The several varieties of coal vary in their composition, hence the term does not admit of precise scientific definition, but they generally agree in containing a much larger proportion of carbon than of the other elements, which are chiefly oxygen and hydrogen, and frequently a small portion of nitrogen. Coal is the most valuable of all the minerals from which Britain derives her prosperity, and may be regarded as the main support of the whole system of her industrial production. It fuses the metals, produces the steam which sets the machinery in motion, and, in short, may be said to render all the resources of this country available for use.—

To call or haul over the coals, to call to a strict or severe account; to reprimand.—To carry coals, to submit to insult. Shak. See under CARRY.—To carry coals to Newcastle, to perform unnecessary labour.—To blow a coal, to kindle strife.

It is you
Have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me.
Shak.

—Coal of fire, a live or burning coal. 'Hail stones and coals of fire.' Pa. xviii. 12.

Coal (kôl), v.t. 1. To burn to coal or charcoal; to char.

Charcoal of roots, coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary coal. Bacon.

2. To mark or delineate with charcoal. 'He coaled out rhymes upon the wall.' Camden. [Rare.]—3. To supply with coal, as a steam-vessel or locomotive engine; as, he was employed in coaling a steamer.

Coal (kôl), v.i. To take in coals; as, the vessel coaled at Portsmouth.

At the twelfth station we coaled. The train ended in the desert here. W. H. Russell.

Coal-backer (kôl'bak-ér), n. A man who is engaged in carrying coals on his back from a ship to the wagons. Mayhew.

Coal-basin (kôl'bâ-sin), n. In geol. a term used to express the depression or basin formed by the subsidence at the centre or upheaval at the edges of the older rocks, in which the various strata of the carboniferous system or coal-measures lie. See COAL-MEASURES.

Coal-bed (kôl'bed), n. A formation in which there are one or more strata of coals; the stratum or strata of coal themselves.

Coal-black (kôl'blak), a. Black as a coal; very black.

Coal-box (kôl'boks), n. A box for holding coals. Swift.

Coal-brand (kôl'brand), n. Smut in wheat.

Coal-brass (kôl'bras), n. A name given to the iron pyrites found in the coal-measures, and which is employed in the manufacture of coppers, and also in alkali works for the sulphur it contains.

Coal-bunker (kôl'bunk-ér), n. A place for storing coals for use; specifically, in steamships, the place where coals for the furnace are stored.

Coal-drop (kôl'drop), n. A broad shallow inclined trough down which coals are discharged from a wharf into the hold of a vessel.

Coal-dust (kôl'dust), n. The dust or powder arising from coal.

It has been attempted . . . to make the coal-dust into bricks. Antisl.

Coalery (kôl'ér), n. A colliery. Woodward.

Coalesce (kô-a-les'), v.t. pret. coalesced; ppr. coalescing. [L. coalesco, from coaleo—præfix co, and alesco, to grow up, from alo, to nourish.] 1. To grow together; to unite by growth into one body; as, the pieces of a fractured bone coalesce.—2. To combine or be collected into one body or mass. 'When they (vapours) begin to coalesce and constitute globules.' Newton.—3. To unite in society; to join so as to form one party, community, or the like; as, the Normans and Anglo-Saxons began to coalesce; political parties sometimes coalesce.

Coalescence (kô-a-les'ens), n. The act of coalescing or uniting together; the state of being intimately united.

Coalescent (kô-a-les'ent), a. Growing together; uniting.

Coalescent (kô-a-les'ent), n. One who or that which coalesces. Athenæum.

Coal-factor (kôl'fak-tér), n. A middleman or intermediate agent between coal buyers and sellers.

Coal-field (kôl'fêld), n. 1. In geol. a deposit or bed of coal.—2. A district where coal abounds.

Coal-fish (kôl'fish), n. A species of Gadus (G. carbonarius) or cod, named from the colour of its back. It grows to the length of 2 feet or 2½, and weighs about 30 lbs. This fish is found in great numbers about the Orkneys and the northern parts of Britain. In Scotland it is generally known as the Sethie. The fry are called, in Scotland, podleys or sillocks, and in the north-east of England, coalkeys.

Coal-fitter (kôl'fî-tér), n. See FITTER, 2.

Coal-formation (kôl'for-mâ'shon), n. In geol. a group of strata in which any of the varieties of coal forms a principal constituent part of a group of strata.

Coal-gas (kôl'gas), n. A variety of carburetted hydrogen which produces the gas-light now so extensively used. The following is an average analysis of ordinary coal-gas: hydrogen 45.58 per cent, marsh-gas 34.90, carbonic oxide 6.64, olefiant-gas 4.08, tetrylene 2.38, sulphuretted hydrogen 0.29, nitrogen 2.46, carbonic acid 3.67. It also contains traces of ammonia, carbon, disulphide, cyanogen, and oxygen.

Coal-heaver (kôl'hêv-ér), n. One who is employed in carrying coal, and especially in discharging it from coal-ships.

Coal-hole (kôl'hôl), n. A coal cellar; the part of a ship's hold lying near to the after-magazine, for containing coal, wood, &c.

Coal-hood, Coally-hood (kôl'hud, kôl'i-hud), n. Local names of the bullfinch and coal-tit, derived from their black crown.

Coal-hulk (kôl'hulk), n. A vessel kept, usually at foreign stations, for supplying steamers with coals.

Coalier, Coallier (kôl'i-ér), n. A collier.

Coaling (kôl'ing), a. Used in or pertaining to the trade in coal; as, a coaling vessel; a coaling wharf.

Coalite† (kô'a-lit), v.i. To unite or coalesce. 'Let them continue to coalite.' Bolingbroke.

Coalite† (kô'a-lit), v.t. To cause to unite or coalesce.

Time has . . . blended and coalited the conquered with the conquerors. Burke.

Coalition (kô-a-lî'shon), n. [From L. coalitus, pp. of coalesco. See COALESCE.] 1. Union in a body or mass; a coming together, as of separate bodies or parts, and their union through natural causes in one body or mass; as, a coalition of atoms or particles. Bentley.—2. Voluntary union of individual persons, parties, or states.

Because Lord Shelburne had gained the king's ear . . . the latter formed a coalition with Lord North, whose person and whose policy he had spent his whole life in decrying. Brougham.

Coalitionist, Coalitioner (kô-a-lî'shon-ist, kô-a-lî'shon-ér), n. One who is an advocate for coalition; one who joins a coalition.

Co-ally (kô'al-lî'), n. A joint-ally; as, the subject of a co-ally. Kent.

Coal-master (kôl'mas-tér), n. The owner or lessee of a coal-field who works it and disposes of its produce.

Coal-measures (kôl'merh-fûz), n. pl. In geol. the upper division of the carboniferous system. These beds consist of alternate layers of white, yellow, or reddish sandstone with thinly laminated beds of clay called clay shale, and sometimes, from their being mixed with bituminous matter, bituminous shale. Between these beds of sandstone and shale the coal-seams occur, usually resting on beds of gray or white clay, called fire-clay.

Coal-meter (kôl'mê-tér), n. One appointed to superintend the measuring of coals.

Coal-mine (kôl'min), n. A mine or pit in which coal is dug.

Coal-miner (kôl'min-ér), n. One who works in a coal-mine.

Coal-mining (kôl'min-ing), a. Pertaining to mining for coals; engaged in or connected with raising coals; as, the coal-mining districts of England; the coal-mining interests.

Coal-mouse (kôl'mous), n. Same as Coal-tit. Written also Cole-mouse.

Coal-note (kôl'nót), n. A particular description of promissory note formerly in use in the port of London.

Coal-passer (kôl'pas-ér), n. One whose duty is to pass coal to the furnace of a steam-engine. Goodrich.

Coal-pit (kôl'pît), n. 1. A pit where coal is dug.—2. In America, a place where charcoal is made.

Coal-plant (kôl'plant), n. A plant, the remains of which form coal. The form and venation of the foliage of coal-plants are beautifully preserved in the clay or shale associated with the coal, and less perfect specimens occur in the sandstone rocks. The plants are principally cryptogamic belonging to the nat. orders Filices, Lycopodiaceæ, and Equisetaceæ. The stems, leaves, and fruits of these plants have been found, and they agree generally with their living representatives, except that they attain to a much greater size. Many fruits and some stems of gymnosperms are also met with.

Coal-scuttle (kôl'skut-ù), n. A vessel for holding coal to supply a parlour fire, &c.

Coalsey (kôl'si), n. See COAL-FISH.

Coal-ship (kôl'ship), n. A ship employed in transporting coal.

Coal-slack, Coal-sleck (kôl'slak, kôl'slek), n. The dust or grime of coal. 'Scarcely ever washed the coal-dust from her face." Dryden.

Coal-smut (kôl'smut), n. Same as Coal-dust.

Coal-staith (kôl'staith), n. See STAIR.

Coal-stone (kôl'ston), n. A kind of mineral coal.

Coal-tar (kôl'tar), n. A thick, black, viscid, opaque liquid which condenses in the pipes when gas is distilled from coal. It is a compound of many different liquid and solid substances, and the separation of these into useful products is now an important branch in manufacturing chemistry. Among these products may be named paraffin, naphtha, benzole, creosote, &c. The basic oil of coal tar is the most abundant source of the beautiful aniline colours, their various hues being due to the oxidation of aniline by means of acids, &c. (See ANILINE.) Coal-tar is a chief ingredient in printer's ink, in the shape of lamp-black. It is also made into asphalt for pavements, and with coal-dust forms by pressure an excellent artificial fuel.

Coal-tit (kôl'tit), n. The Parus ater, one of the titmice so called from its glossy black head and neck. Written also Cole-tit.

Coal-trimmer (kôl'trim-er), n. One who is employed to stow and trim the fuel for the fires of the boilers of marine steam-engines.

Coal-viewer (kôl'vü-er), n. In mining, (a) one whose duty is to attend to the interests of the person to whom the royalty is payable. (b) One whose duty is to attend to the interests of the person who works the mine.

Coal-whipper (kôl'whip-er), n. One who rules coal from the hold of a ship. Coal-whippers are now being superseded by machinery, which executes the work both more cheaply and more expeditiously.

Coal-whipping (kôl'whip-ing), n. The act of raising coals from the hold of a vessel.

Coal-work (kôl'wörk), n. A place where coal is dug, including the machinery for raising the coal, a colliery.

Coal-working (kôl'wörk-ing), n. A coal-mine, the spot where coal is raised.

At last we reached the coal-workings, and a more desolate, melancholy-looking place for a mine I have never seen. A. Nott.

Coaly (kôl'), a. Pertaining to or like coal; containing coal. 'Coaly Tyne.' Milton.

Co-ambulant (kô-am-bü-lant), a. [L. co-, prefix, and ambulant, walking about.] In her walking side by side.

Coaming (kô-ming), n. (For coaming, from come.) Naut. One of the raised borders or edges of the hatchways, made to prevent water from running into the lower apartments from the deck. Written also Coaming.

Coannex (kô-an-nex), v.t. [Prefix co-, and annex.] To annex with something else. [Rare.]

Coapprehend (kô-ap-prê-hend), v.t. [Prefix co-, and apprehend.] To apprehend with another. Sir T. Browne. [Rare.]

Coaptation (kô-ap-tä'shon), n. [L. co-, prefix, from eo with, and apto, to fit.] The adaptation or adjustment of parts to each other. Specifically, in surgery the act of placing the broken extremities of a bone in their natural position, or of restoring a luxated bone to its place, bone-setting. Dunham.

Coarctate, Coarctate (kô-ärkt, kô-ärktät), v.t. [L. co-, prefix, and arctare (arct), to bring or press together.] 1. To press together, to crowd, to confine closely. Bacon. 2. To restrain, to confine. Apuleius.

Coarctated, Coarctated (kô-ärktät, kô-ärktät-ed), p and a. (See above.) Crowded; applied in bot. to a panicle which is dense, compact, or crowded.

Coarctation (kô-ärktä'thon), n. 1. Confinement, restraint to a narrow space, restraint of liberty. Bacon. — 2. Pressure, constriction, specifically, in med. the contracting or lessening of the diameter of a canal, as the intestinal canal or the urethra.

Coarse (kôrs), a. (Formerly written coarser, coarser, and believed to be the same word as coarse.) A thing of coarse, or in coarse, is what is natural, ordinary, common, and hence probably the development of the meaning. 1. Wanting in fineness of texture or structure, or in elegance of form, composed of large parts or particles, thick and rough in texture, of ordinary or inferior quality, as, coarse thread or yarn, coarse hair; coarse sand; coarse cloth; coarse glass; coarse furniture. 'Coarse complexion.' Mil- ton. 'A coarse and useless dunghill weed.' Shakspeare.

Now I feel of what coarse metal ye are made. Shakspeare.

But, alas, that the day is coarse. Young.

2. Rude; rough, unrefined, uncivil, unpolished, as, coarse manners. 'In my coarse English.' Dryden. 'Coarse uncivilized words.' Addison. 'Daughter of our men-dow, yet not coarse.' Pennington. — 3. Gross; indelicate, as, he indulged in coarse language. — Coarse AA. See ACOLONIMATE.

Coarse-grained (kôrs-gräind), a. 1. Consisting of large particles or constituent elements, as, coarse-grained granite or wood. 2. Wanting in refinement or delicacy, vulgar; as, a coarse-grained nature.

Coarsely (kôrs'ly), adv. In a coarse manner, roughly, without fineness or refinement, rudely, insignificantly, uncivilly; without art or polish, grossly. 'Fared coarsely and poorly.' Sir T. Browne.

There is a greatness that corrects the count. Shakspeare. Reports but coarsely of her.

Coarsen (kôrs), v.t. To render coarse or wanting in refinement; to make vulgar; as, to coarsen one's nature. [Rare.]

Coarseness (kôrs'ness), n. The state or quality of being coarse in all its meanings. 'The coarseness of sackcloth.' Dr H. More.

Forbear the coarseness of the illustration. Sir R. L. Estlin.

There appears a coarseness and vulgarity in all the proceedings of the assembly. Burke.

Coarse-stuff (kôrs'stuf), n. In building, a mixture of lime and hair used in the first coat and floating of plastering.

Co-articulation (kô-är-tik'ü-lä'shon), n. The articulation of the bones in forming a joint.

Co-assessor (kô-as-ses'ör), n. [Prefix co-, and assessor.] A joint assessor.

Coffea (kof-fē-a), n. [From coffea.] A considerable genus of shrubs, nat. order Rubiaceae, natives of tropical Asia and Africa. Some species yield coffee (which see).

Coffee (kof), n. [Fr. café, G. kaffee, D. kofy, from Turk. kahveh, Ar. kahwah, coffee.] 1. The berry of a tree belonging to the genus Coffea (C. arabica), nat. order Rubiaceae. It is a native of Arabia and Abyssinia; but is now extensively cultivated throughout tropical countries. It will grow to the height of 16 or 18 feet, but it is seldom permitted to exceed 8 or 9 feet, for the convenience of gathering the fruit. The stem is upright, and covered with a light brown bark; the branches are horizontal and opposite. The flowers grow in clusters at the bases of the leaves, are pure white, and of an agreeable odour. The fruit is a small red fleshy berry, having the size and appearance of a small cherry. Each berry contains two seeds, commonly called coffee-beans or coffee-nibs. When ripe the berries are gathered, and the outer pulp and the parchment-like covering of the seeds are removed. The best coffee is said to be the Mocha coffee from Arabia Felix. 2. A drink made from the seeds of the coffee-tree, by infusion or decoction, the former method being said to be that which produces by far the best beverage, as the flavour is spoiled by boiling. Before being used the seeds are roasted, and then ground in a coffee-mill, or, as in the East, pounded. The beverage is improved by being made with beans freshly roasted and ground. Coffee acts as a slight stimulant, and thus promotes cheerfulness and removes languor, it also aids digestion, but in some constitutions it induces sleeplessness and nervous tremblings. The use of coffee is said to have been made known in Europe by Leonhard Rauwolf, a German physician, whose travels appeared in 1582. It was introduced into England by a merchant named Edwards, whose Greek servant Paqua opened a coffee-house in London in 1652.

Coffee-bean (kof-fē-bān), n. A coffee seed or coffee-berry

Coffee-berry (kof-fē-ber-ē), n. The fruit of the coffee-tree.

merly held a position somewhat similar to the clubs of the present day

The coffee-house must not be dismissed with a cursory mention. It might indeed, at that time, have been not improperly called a most important political institution. The coffee-houses were the chief organs through which the public opinion of the metropolis vented itself. Every man of the upper or middle class went daily to his coffee-house to learn the news and discuss it. Every coffee-house had one or more orators, to whose eloquence the crowd listened with admiration, and who soon became what the journalists of our own time have become called—a fourth estate of the realm. Mansel

Coffee-man (kof-fē-man), n. One who keeps a coffee-house. Addison

Coffee-mill (kof-fē-mil), n. A small machine or mill for grinding coffee.

Cohabitation (kó-hab'it-á'shon) n. 1. The act or state of dwelling together or in the same place with another. 'A cohabitation of the spirit with flesh.' Dr. H. More.—2. The state of living together as man and wife: often said of persons who are not legally married, and with a special reference to sexual intercourse.

Cohabiter (kó-hab'it-ér) n. A cohabitant. 'Cohabitors of the same region.' Hobbes.

Cohair (kó-ár) n. [l. coharere—co, with, and harere, an heir. See HEIR.] A joint-hair; one who succeeds to a share of an inheritance which is to be divided among two or more.

Cohairress (kó-ár-es) n. A female who inherits a share of an estate which is to be divided among two or more heirs or heirresses; a joint-heiress.

Coherald (kó-her'ald) n. A joint-herald. Cohere (kó-hér) v. i. pret. cohered; ppr. cohering. [l. coherere—co for con, and harere, to stick or cleave together.] 1. To stick together; to cleave; to be united; to hold fast, as parts of the same mass, or as two substances that attract each other.—2. To be well connected or coherent; to follow regularly in the natural order; to be suited in connection, as the parts of a discourse, or as arguments in a train of reasoning.—3. To suit; to be fitted; to agree. 'Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing.' Shak.

Coherence, Coherency (kó-hér-ens, kó-hér-en-si) n. 1. The state of cohering; a sticking, cleaving, or hanging together; union of parts of the same body, or a cleaving together of two bodies, by means of attraction. 2. Suitable connection or dependence, proceeding from the natural relation of parts or things to each other, as in the parts of a discourse or of any system; consistency.

Coherency of discourse, and a direct tendency of all the parts of it to an argument in hand, are most eminently to be found in him. Locke.

Coherent (kó-hér-ent) a. 1. Sticking together; cleaving, as the parts of bodies, solid or fluid.—2. Connected; consistent: having a due agreement of parts; consecutive: said of things; as, a coherent discourse.—3. Observing due agreement; consistent; consecutive: said of persons.

A coherent thinker and a strict reasoner is not to be made at once by a set of rules. Watts.

4. Suited; fitted; adapted; agreeing. Instruct my daughter how she shall persevere, That time and place with this deceit so levial, May prove coherent. Shak.

Coherentific (kó-hér-en-tif'ik) a. Causing coherence. [Rare.] 'Cohesive or coherentific force.' Coleridge.

Coherently (kó-hér-ent-li) adv. In a coherent manner; with due connection or agreement of parts.

It is a history in which none of the events follow one another coherently. Buckle.

Cohesibility (kó-hér-i-bil'i-ti) n. The tendency to unite by cohesion; cohesiveness.

Cohesible (kó-hér-i-bi) a. Capable of cohesion.

Cohesion (kó-hé'shon) n. [From l. coharere, coharere, to cohere. See COHERE.] 1. The act or state of cohering; uniting, or sticking together; in physics, the state in which, or the force by which, the particles of the same material are kept in contact as to form a continuous mass. This force acts at insensible distances or when the particles of matter which it unites are placed in contact, and is thus distinguished from the attraction of gravitation, which acts at any distance. It unites particles into a single mass, and that without producing any change of properties, and is thus distinguished from adhesion, which takes place between different masses or substances, as between fluids and solids; and from chemical attraction or affinity, which unites particles of different kinds together, and produces a new substance. The power of cohesion in different bodies is estimated by the force necessary to pull them asunder. In general, cohesion is most powerful among the particles of solid bodies, weaker among those of fluids, and least of all, or almost entirely wanting, in elastic fluids, as air and gases. Hardness, softness, tenacity, elasticity, malleability, and ductility are to be considered as modifications of cohesion. The great antagonist of cohesion is heat. Magnetic cohesion, that power by which two magnetic bodies adhere together, as iron to a piece of loadstone.—Cohesion figures, a class of figures produced by the attraction of liquids for other liquids or solids with which they are in contact, and divided into surface, submersion, breath, and electric cohesion figures. It was found by Tomlinson that a drop of an independent liquid, as oil or alcohol, spread itself out on the surface of water always in a definite figure, but differing with each fluid dropped on the water, and he suggested that this might be employed as a test for oils, &c. The same principle holds with liquids which from greater specific gravity, sink slowly to the bottom, each liquid submerged forming a specific figure peculiar to itself. Breath figures are produced by putting a drop of the liquid to be examined on a slip of mica and breathing on it, when again each fluid takes a distinct characteristic shape. Electric cohesion figures are produced by electrifying drops of various liquids placed on a plate of glass.—2. Connection; dependence; affinity; coherence. 'Ideas that have no natural cohesion.' Locke. [Now rare in this sense.]

Cohesive (kó-hé'siv) a. Causing cohesion; as, cohesive force.

Cohesively (kó-hé'siv-li) adv. In a cohesive manner; with cohesion.

Cohesiveness (kó-hé'siv-nes) n. The quality of being cohesive; the tendency to unite by cohesion; cohesibility.

Cohibit (kó-hi-bit) v. t. [l. cohibere, from prefix co, together, and habere, to hold.] To restrain. Bailey.

Cohibition (kó-hi-bit'shon) n. Hindrance; restraint.

Cohibitor (kó-hi-bit-ér) n. One who restrains.

Cohobate (kó-hó-bát) v. t. [Fr. cohober, Sp. cohobar; perhaps of Arabic origin.] Among early chemists, to repeat the distillation of the same liquor, or that from the same body, pouring the liquor back upon the matter remaining in the vessel.

Cohobation (kó-hó-bát'shon) n. The operation of cohobating.

Cohorn (kó-horn) n. Same as Coehorn.

Cohort (kó-hort) n. [l. cohors, cohortia.] 1. In Rom. antiq., a body of about 500 or 600 men. Each cohort consisted of three maniples, and each manipulus of two centuries; and ten cohorts constituted a legion.—2. A band or body of warriors in general.

The Assyrian came down like a wolf on the fold, And his cohorts were gleaming in purple and gold. Byron.

3. In some systems of classification, a group, as of plants or animals.

Cohortation (kó-hor-tá'shon) n. Exhortation; encouragement. Bailey.

Coif (kóif) n. [Fr. coiffe, L.L. coffa, cuffa, from M.H.G. kuffe, kuffe, a kind of cap.] 1. A close-fitting cap or head-dress; a kind of caul or cap worn by sergeants-at-law and others. Its chief original use was to cover the clerical tonsure.—2. A kind of close-fitting cap of mail; a coiffette.

Coif (kóif) v. t. To cover or dress with, or as with, a coif. Martinus Scriblerus.

Coiffette (kwa-fet') n. [Fr. dim. of coiffe. See COIF.] A skull-cap of iron or steel worn by soldiers in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries.

Coiffure (kóif'fúr) n. [Fr. See COIF.] A head-dress; specifically, the head-dress of a lady.

Brantôme dwells with rapture on the elegance of her costume, the matchless taste in its arrangement, and the perfection of her coiffure. Prescott.

Coign (kóin) n. A corner; a coin or quoin. See you yond coign o' the capitol; yond corner-stone? Shak.

Coigne, Coigny (kóin, kóin') n. An Irish term for an old custom of that country of the landlords quartering themselves upon their tenants at pleasure. The term appears to have been applied also to others, as soldiers, forcibly billeting themselves. Written also Coyne, Coynie. Sir J. Davies.

Coigne, Coynie (kóin, kóin') v. t. To quarter one's self on another by force; to live by extortion. [Irish.]

Though they came not armed like soldiers to be cessed upon me, yet their purpose was to coyne upon me, and to eat me out of house and home. L. Bryett.

Coil (kóil) v. t. [O.Fr. coillir, cueillir (E. culd), from l. colligere, to collect—col for con, together, and lego, to gather.] 1. To gather into a narrow compass. Boyle.—2. To gather into a series of rings above one another; to twist or wind spirally; as, to coil a rope; a serpent coils itself.—3. To entangle. 'And pleasure coils thee in her dangerous snare.' T. Edwards.

Coil (kóil) v. i. To form rings or spirals; to wind.

They coil'd and swam, and ev'ry track Was a flash of golden fire. Coleridge.

Coil (kóil) n. A ring or series of rings or spirals into which a rope or other pliant body is wound. 'The wild grape-vines that twisted their coils from tree to tree.' Irving.

Coil (koll), n. [Probably a different word from the former and derived from the Celtic: comp. Ir. and Gael. goill, war, battle; goil, to rage.] Perplexities, tumult, bustle, turmoil. 'When we have shuffled off this mortal coil' (that is, this bustle and turmoil of life). Shak. 'And still a coil the grasshopper did keep.' Thomson.

I am a man withdrawn from earthly coil.

Collon, t. n. [Fr. couillon, It. cogitone.] A testicle. Chaucer.

Coin (koin), n. [Fr. coin, a wedge, the die with which money is stamped, a coin, a corner, from L. cuneus, a wedge.] 1. In arch. a corner or angle. See QUOIN.—2. The specific name given to various wedge-shaped pieces used for different purposes; as, (a) for raising or lowering a piece of ordnance; (b) for fastening a printer's form; (c) for keeping caaks in their places. See QUOIN.—3. The die employed for stamping money. Hence—4. A piece of metal, as gold, silver, copper, or some alloy, converted into money by impressing on it marks, figures, or characters; such pieces collectively; metallic currency; money; as, a beautiful coin; a large quantity of coin. 'All the coin in thy father's exchequer.' Shak.—5. That which serves for payment, requital, or recompense. The loss of present advantage to flesh and blood is repaid in a nobler coin. Hammond.

—To pay one in his own coin, to treat him as he has treated you; to give him tit for tat. Coin (koin), v. t. 1. To stamp and convert into money; to mint; as, to coin gold.—2. To make; to fabricate; to invent; as, to coin words.

Some tale, some new pretext, he daily coined

To soothe his sister and delude her mind. Dryden.

Coinage (koin'aj), n. 1. The act, art, or practice of stamping money.—2. Coin; money coined; stamped and legitimated metal for a circulating medium. 'A laugh ringing like proven golden coinage true.' Tennyson. 3. The charges or expense of coining money. 4. The act or process of forming or producing; invention; fabrication. 'Unnecessary coinage of words.' Dryden.—5. What is fabricated or produced.

This is the very coinage of your brain. Shak.

Coincide (kô-in-sid'), v. i. pret. coincided; ppr. coinciding. [L. L. coincido, from L. prefix co, with, and incido, to fall on—in, and cado, to fall.] 1. To occupy the same place in space, or the same position in a scale or series; as, a temperature of 25° on the Centigrade scale coincides with one of 77° on the scale of Fahrenheit. 'If the equator and the ecliptic had coincided.' Dr. G. Cheyne.—2. To happen at the same time; to be contemporaneous.—3. To concur; to agree; to correspond exactly; as, the judges did not coincide in opinion; that did not coincide with my views.

The rules of right judgment and of good ratiocination often coincide with each other. Watts.

Coincidence (kô-in-sid'-ens), n. [From the verb.] 1. The fact of occupying the same place in space or the same position in a scale or series; exact correspondence in position; as, the coincidence of equal and similar triangles.

The want of exact coincidence between these two notes is an inherent arithmetic imperfection in the musical scale. Hewell.

2. A happening or agreeing in time; contemporaneousness; as, the coincidence of two events.—3. Concurrence; agreement in circumstance, character, &c.; exact correspondence generally, or a case of exact correspondence; as, the coincidence of two or more opinions. 'The actual coincidences that sometimes happen between dreams and events.' Chambers's Ency.

The very concurrence and coincidence of so many evidences... carries a great weight. Sir M. Hall.

Those who discourse metaphysically of the nature of truth, as to the reality of the thing, affirm a perfect coincidence between truth and goodness. South.

Coincidence (kô-in-si-den-si), n. Coincidence. Warburton. [Rare.]

Coinciding (kô-in-si-dent), v. i. 1. Coinciding; occupying the same place in space, or the same position in a scale or series.—2. Happening at the same time.—3. Concurrent; exactly corresponding; in all respects conformable.

Christianity teaches nothing but what is perfectly coincident with the ruling principles of a virtuous man. South.

Coincident (kô-in-si-dent), n. A concurrence; a coincidence. Worcester. [Rare.]

Coincidental (kô-in-si-dent'al), a. Same as Coincident.

Coincidentally (kô-in-si-dent'li), adv. In a coincident manner; with coincidence.

Coincider (kô-in-sid'er), n. One who or that which coincides or concurs.

Coincidence (kô-in-si-dent'-shon), n. [L. prefix co, with, and indicatio, from indico, to show.] A concurrent indication, sign, or symptom.

Coiner (koin'er), n. 1. One who stamps coin; a minter; a maker of money: usually applied to a maker of base or counterfeit coin.—2. An inventor or maker, as of words. 'Dionysius a coiner of etymologies.' Camden.

Co-inhabitant (kô-in-hab'it-ant), n. One who dwells with another or with others. Dr. H. More.

Co-inhabiting (kô-in-hab'it-ing), n. A dwelling together; a cohabiting. Milton.

Co-inhere (kô-in-hër), v. i. To inhere together; to be included or exist together in the same thing.

We can justify the postulation of two different substances, exclusively on the supposition of the incompatibility of the double series of phenomena to co-inhere in one. Sir W. Hamilton.

Coinheritance (kô-in-her'it-ans), n. Joint inheritance.

Coinheritor (kô-in-her'it-ër), n. A joint heir; a coheir.

Coining-press (koin'ing-press), n. A power-lever screw-press fitted with an upper and a lower die, by which metal plates called blanks are impressed with a design and legend, and are so converted into coin.

Coinquinate (kô-in-'kwi-nät'), v. t. [L. coinquino, to pollute.] To pollute. Skelton.

Coinquination (kô-in-'kwi-nä'-shon), n. Defilement. Cotgrave.

Coinstantaneous (kô-in-stan'tä-në-us), a. Happening at the same instant. Orvig.

Coint, t. a. [O. Fr. quaint is the same word.] Neat; trim. Chaucer.

Cointense (kô-in-tens'), a. [Prefix co, and intense.] Of equal intensity with another object. H. Spencer.

Cointension (kô-in-ten'shon), n. The condition of being of equal tension, intenseness, or intensity with another object. H. Spencer.

Cointensity (kô-in-tens'i-ti), n. Same as Cointension. H. Spencer.

Co-interest (kô-in'ter-est), n. A joint interest. Milton.

Coir, Coire (koir), n. A species of yarn manufactured from the husk of cocoa-nuts, and formed into cordage, sail-cloth, matting, &c. Cordage made of this material rots in fresh water and snaps in frost, but it is strengthened by salt water, is very buoyant and elastic, and is thus in some respects preferable to hemp for ships' cordage.

Coistril (koi'stril), n. [O. Fr. coustiller, one who is armed with or carries a couteau or knife, an inferior groom.] An inferior groom, or a lad employed by the esquire to carry a knight's arms; hence, a lad; a mean paltry fellow. Written also Coystril, Coystril.

Cott (kott), n. A quoit (which see).

Cottion (kô-i'shon), n. [L. cotio, from coco, to come together—coa, and eo, to go.] A coming together; the venereal intercourse of the sexes; copulation.

Cotx (kô'ika), n. [Gr. koix, an Egyptian variety of palm.] A genus of plants, nat. order Gramineæ. The best known species is C. Lacryma, commonly called Job's tears, a native of tropical Asia. Its specific name is derived from its hard stony fruits, which have a fancied resemblance to tear-drops.

Cojoin (kô-join'), v. t. or i. [See CONJOIN.] To join or associate. Shak.

Cofuror (kô-jû-rër), n. [Prefix co, and furor.] One who swears to another's credibility. Dr. W. Wotton.

Coke (kôk), n. [Probably from cook or cake; comp. caking coal.] Coal deprived of its bitumen, sulphur, or other extraneous or volatile matter by fire. The process by which coal is converted into coke is similar to that by which charcoal is made. Coke is used for exciting intense heat for chemical purposes, for smelting iron ore, and for operations in which common coal would be detrimental, as the drying of malt and in locomotives' furnaces, &c. Sometimes written Coak.

Coke (kôk), v. t. pret. & pp. coked; ppr. caking. To convert into coke; to deprive of volatile matter, as coal.

Coke, t. n. A cook. Chaucer.

Coker-nut (kô'kër-nut), n. A commercial mode of spelling Cocoa-nut, in order to make a broader distinction between various articles spelled much in the same manner.

Cokes (kôks), n. [Probably connected with cookeney.] This word has given us the verb to cox. A fool; a simpleton.

Why will we make a cokes of this wise master, We will, my mistress, an absolute fine cokes. B. Jonson.

Cokewold, t. n. A cuckold. Chaucer.

Coking-kiln, Coking-oven (kôk'ing-kîl, kôk'ing-u'v'n), n. A chamber in which coal is coked.

Col, t. n. The form which the L. prefix co (for cum) takes before t. See CO.

Col (kol), n. [Fr., neck.] An elevated mountain pass between two higher summits; a mountain pass connecting two valleys, one on either side of a mountain; the most elevated part of a mountain pass.

Colander (kol'an-dër or kol'an-dër), n. [L. colans, colantis, ppr. of colo, to strain, from colere, a strainer, a colander.] A vessel with a bottom perforated with little holes for straining liquors; a strainer. Also written Collender.

An oaker colander provide

Of twigs thick wrought. Dryden.

Cola-nut, Cola-seed (kô'la-nut, kô'la-sëd), n. A brownish bitter seed, about the size of a chestnut, produced by an African tree, Cola acuminata, nat. order Sterculiaceæ, which the natives of Guinea value highly as a condiment and digestive. Under the name of cola- or goora-nut it has been introduced by the negroes into the West Indies and Brazil, where it is also highly prized. It contains a considerable amount of theine.

Colarion (kol'a-rin), n. [Fr., il colarino.] See COLLAR. In arch. the little frieze of the capital of the Tuscan and Doric column placed between the astragal and the annulets. Weale.

Colation (kol-lä'shon), n. [L. colo, to strain. See COLANDER.] The act of straining or purifying liquor by passing it through a perforated vessel. [Rare.]

Co-latitude (kô-lat'i-tüd), n. [Abbrev. of complement and latitude.] The complement of the latitude, or what it wants of 90°.

Cola-tree (kô'la-trë), n. The tree (Cola acuminata) which produces the cola-nut (which see).

Colature (kol'a-tür), n. [L. colatura, from colo, to strain.] The act of straining; the matter strained. [Rare.]

Colbertine, Colbertean (kol'bër-tän), n. [So called from Colbert, a French minister in the seventeenth century, and a patron of industry and the arts.] A kind of lace once worn by women. 'Pinnars edged with colbertine.' Swift.

Colchicin, Colchicine (kol'chi-sin), n. [C₁₅H₁₅NO₆.] An alkaloid obtained from colchicum bulbs and seeds by exhaustion with boiling alcohol. It is of great importance in materia medica, being principally used for the alleviation or cure of gout and rheumatism. It acts as an emetic, diuretic, and cathartic. In large doses it acts as a narcotico-acrid poison.

Colchicum (kol'chi-kum), n. [L. a plant with a poisonous root, from Colchis, the native country of Medea, the famous sorceress and poisoner.] A genus of liliaceous plants, with radical leaves generally produced in spring, and crocus-like flowers appearing in the autumn. About twenty species are known, natives of Europe and Asia, the most familiar being C. autumnale (the meadow-saffron), a plant with a solid bulb-like root-stock, found in England and various parts of the Continent, and forming a gay carpet in the autumn in the fields, where its lively, purple, crocus-like flowers spring up. Its bulbs and its seeds abound in an acid, stimulating, deleterious principle called colchicin (which see).

Colcothar (kol'ko-thar), n. [L. L. colcothar, colcothar vitrioli. Probably Ar.] The brownish-red peroxide of iron which remains after the distillation of the acid from sulphate of iron; used for polishing glass and other substances. It is called by artists crocus or crocus martia.

Cold (kôld), a. pp. of cool. [A. Sax. cold, cöld; cog. Dan. kold, Icel. kaldr, Sw. kall, D. koud, Goth. kaido, G. kalt; from root of cool, chill, which also appears in L. gelidus, gelid.] 1. Not warm or hot; gelid; frigid; causing coldness; chilling; cooling: a relative term. A substance is cold to the touch when it is less warm than the body, and when in contact the heat of the body passes from the body to the substance; as, cold air; a cold stone; cold water. It denotes a greater degree of the quality than cool.—2. Having the sensation of cold; chill; shivering or inclined to shiver; as, I am cold.—3. Fig. as applied to what affects the senses, (a) bland; mild; not pungent or acrid.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun than the hot herbs. Bacon.

(b) Not affecting the sense of smell strongly; as, the scent grew cold.—4. Fig. as applied to persons or what affects the feelings, (a) frigid; wanting passion, zeal, or ardour; insensible; indifferent; unconcerned; not animated or easily excited into action; not affectionate, cordial, or friendly; as, a cold spectator; a cold Christian; a cold lover or friend; a cold temper.

Thou art neither cold nor hot. Rev. III. 15.
Shy she was, and I thought her cold. Tennyson.

(b) Not heated by sensual desire; chaste. He spoke of her, as Dian had hot dreams, And she alone were cold. Shak.

(c) Not moving; unaffected; not animated or animating; not able to excite feeling or interest; spiritless; as, a cold discourse; cold comfort.

The jest grows cold when it comes on in a second scene. Addison.

(d) Not hasty; not violent; deliberate; cool. 'The cold neutrality of an impartial judge.' Burke.—In cold blood, without excitement, emotion, or passion.

He was slain in cold blood after the fight was over. Scott.

—To give, show, or turn the cold shoulder, to treat a person with studied coldness, neglect, or contempt.—Cold heart, fear; cowardice. Shak.—Cold purse, empty purse. Shak.—SYN. Gelid, frigid, cool, chill, insensible, indifferent, unconcerned, half-hearted, spiritless, reserved, deliberate.

Cold (kôld), n. [See the adjective.] 1. The relative absence or want of heat; the cause of the sensation of coolness.

The parching air Burns fire, and cold performs the effect of fire. Milton.

2. The sensation produced in animal bodies by the escape of heat. My teeth, which now are dropt away, Would chatter with the cold. Tennyson.

3. An indisposition occasioned by cold; a catarrh; as, to have a severe cold.

Cold† (kôld), v. i. To grow cold. Chaucer.

Cold-blast (kôld'blast), n. A blast or current of cold air; especially, in metal, the name given to air at its natural temperature forced through furnaces for smelting iron; opposed to hot-blast.

Cold-blooded (kôld'blud-ed), a. Having cold blood: (a) fig. without sensibility or feeling. 'Thou cold-blooded slave.' Shak.

(b) In zool. a term applied to those animals the temperature of whose blood ranges from the freezing-point or near it to 90° Fahr. in accordance with that of the surrounding medium, or to those whose blood is a very little higher in temperature than their habitat.

Cold-chisel (kôld'chis-el), n. A chisel whose cutting edge is formed of steel properly strengthened by tempering, for cutting metal in its cold state.

Cold-cream (kôld'krém), n. A kind of cooling unguent for the skin, variously prepared. A very good variety is made by heating four parts of olive-oil with one of white wax.

Cold-cream is useful in the case of chaps, as in the hands, lips, &c.

Cold-hearted (kôld'härt-ed), a. Wanting passion or feeling; indifferent. 'Cold-hearted frozen formalists.' Young.

Cold-heartedly (kôld'härt-ed-ly), adv. In a cold-hearted manner.

Cold-heartedness (kôld'härt-ed-ness), n. Want of feeling or sensibility.

Coldish (kôld'ish), a. Somewhat cold.

Cold-kind† (kôld'kind), a. Uniting coldness and kindness. Milton.

Coldly (kôld'ly), adv. In a cold manner; without warmth; without concern; without ardour or animation; without apparent passion, emotion, or feeling; with indifference or negligence; dispassionately; calmly; as, to answer one coldly; a proposition is coldly received.

If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly. Shak.

Thrift, thrift, Horatio! the funeral baked-meats Did coldly furnish forth the marriage tables. Shak.

Cold-moving (kôld'möv-ing), a. Done with a gesture indicating want of cordiality or indifference.

With certain half-caps and cold-moving nods They froze me into silence. Shak.

Coldness (kôld'ness), n. The state or quality of being cold: (a) want of heat. (b) Unconcern; indifference; a frigid state of temper; want of ardour, zeal, emotion, animation, or spirit; as, to receive an answer with coldness; to listen with coldness. 'The faithless coldness of the times.' Tennyson. 'Chilling his carresses by the coldness of her manners.' Tennyson. (c) Want of sensual desire; frigidity; chastity. 'Virgin coldness.' Pope.

Cold-pale (kôld'päl), a. Cold and pale. Cold-pale weakness numbs each feeling part. Shak.

Cold-served (kôld'sêrvd), a. 1. Served up cold.—2. Dull; tiresome; tedious. Young.

Cold-short (kôld'short), a. Brittle when cold; as, cold-short iron.

Coldstreams (kôld'strémz), n. pl. A distinguished regiment of foot-guards, the oldest corps in the British army except the 1st Foot (Royal Scots), so named because first raised at Coldstream in Berwickshire, by General Monk, in 1660, with the object of bringing back Charles II. to the throne. The full name is Coldstream Guards.

Cole (kôl), n. [Icel. kollr, a top, a head, a heap.] One of the small conical heaps into which hay is first made up after being cut; a haycock. [Scottish.]

Cole (kôl), n. [A. Sax. col, cawel, Mke Sc. kale, kail, G. kohl, borrowed from L. colis, caulis, a cabbage-stalk, a cabbage.] The general name of all sorts of cabbage or plants of the genus Brassica; generally used in its compounds, colewort, cauliflower, &c.

Co-legatee (kô'leg-a-tê'), n. [Prefix co, and legatee.] One who is a legatee along with another or others.

Cole-mouse (kôl'mous), n. See COAL-MOUSE.

Coleophyll, Coleophyllum (kôl'ê-ô-phil, kôl'ê-ô-phil'um), n. [Gr. koleos, a sheath, and phyllon, a leaf.] In bot. the first leaf which follows the cotyledon in endogens, and ensheaths the succeeding leaves. It is well seen in Liliaceae and Alliaceae. Called also Coleoptila.

of the object-glass, and intersects at right angles those wires which are fixed in the focus. The deviation of the actual line of sight in a telescope from the focus and centre of the object-glass, or from the proper position, is termed the error of collimation, which must be corrected or allowed for in observations.

Collimator (kol-lim'a-tér), n. [See above.] 1. A small telescope used for adjusting the line of collimation and determining the collimation error in astronomical instruments. 2. The object-glass of the telescope of a spectroscope to which the slit is attached. Also called Collimating lens. See SPECTROSCOPE.

Collin (kol-lin), n. [See COLLOID.] The purest form of gelatin, taken as the type of all similar substances, which are hence called colloids.

Colline (kol-lin), n. [Fr. colline, from L. collis, a hill.] A little hill; a mount. 'Watered parks, full of fine collines and ponds.' Boetius. [Rare.]

Collinear (kol-lin'é-ér), a. Pertaining to or situated in a corresponding line; as, a series of points collinear with another series.

Collineate (kol-lin'é-át), v. t. and i. [L. collineo—col, together, and linea, a line.] To aim or direct in a line to a fixed object; to direct or lie in a line corresponding with another.

Collineation (kol-lin'é-á-shon), n. The act of aiming or directing in a line to a fixed object. Johnson.

Collingly (kol-ling-lí), adv. [From coll, to embrace.] With embracing. 'Collingly him kist.' Gascogne.

Collingual (kol-ling-gwál), a. [L. col, with, and lingua, a tongue or language.] Speaking the same language. West. Rev.

Colligable (kol-lik-wa-bl), a. [See COLLIQUATE.] Capable of being liquefied or melted; liable to melt, grow soft, or become fluid.

Colligament (kol-lik-wa-ment), n. 1. The substance formed by melting; that which is melted. 2. The first rudiments of an embryo in generation.

Colligant (kol-lí-kwánt), a. Having the power of dissolving or melting. Bailey.

Colligate (kol-lí-kwát), v. t. or i. [L. colliguo—col, and liguo, to melt. See LIQUID.] To melt; to dissolve; to change from solid to fluid; to make or become liquid.

The ore is colligated by the violence of the fire. Boyle.
Ice will dissolve in fire and colligate in water. Sir T. Browne.

Colligation (kol-lí-kwá-shon), n. 1. The act of melting; a melting or fusing together. Bacon; Boyle. 2. In old med. a wasting away of solid parts, accompanied by an excessive excretion of fluids.

Colligative (kol-lik-wá-tiv), a. 1. Melting; dissolving. 2. In med. profuse or excessive, so as to cause exhaustion; said of discharges; as, a colligative sweat, a profuse clammy sweat.

Colligation (kol-lik-wé-fak'-shon), n. [L. colligacio—col, with, and ligacio, to make liquid.] A melting together; the reduction of different bodies into one mass by fusion. 'The incorporation of metals by simple colligation.' Bacon.

Collision (kol-lí-zhon), n. [L. collisio, from collido, collisum—col, together, and ludo, to strike or hurt.] 1. The act of striking or dashing together; a striking together of two hard bodies; the meeting and mutual striking of two or more moving bodies, or of a moving body with a stationary one. 'Collision of two bodies.' Milton. 'Like sparks from flint' collision. Sir J. Denham. 2. Opposition; antagonism; interference; as, a collision of interests or of parties. 'The collision of contrary false principles.' Warburton.

Collusive (kol-lí-siv), a. Causing collision; clashing. Blackmore.

Colligant (kol-lí-gánt), n. [Prefix col for con, and ligant.] One who litigates or wrangles with another.

Colligant (kol-lí-gánt), a. Disputing or wrangling together. Mauder.

Collocate (kol-ló-kát), v. t. pret. & pp. collocat, collocating. [L. colloco—col, together, and loco, to set or place.] To set or place; to set; to station. 'To marshal and collocate in order his battalions.' Hall.

Collocate (kol-ló-kát), a. Set; placed. 'The parts wherein that virtue is collocate.' Bacon.

Collocation (kol-ló-ká-shon), n. [L. collocatio.] 1. The act of collocating or placing; the act of disposing along with something else; the act of arranging.

If elegance consists in the choice and collocation of words, you have a most indubitable title to it. Sir W. Jones.

2. The state of being placed, or placed along with something else; the manner in which a thing is placed with regard to something else; disposition; arrangement; as, in this collocation the sense of the word is clear.

Collocution (kol-ló-kú'-shon), n. [L. collocutio—col, together, and locutio, from loquor, to speak.] A speaking or conversing together; conference; mutual discourse. Bailey.

Collocutor (kol-ló-kú-tér or kol-lók'-ú-tér), n. One of the speakers in a dialogue. Derham.

Colloid (kol-ló'-di-on), n. [Gr. kolla, glue, and eidos, resemblance.] A substance prepared by dissolving pyroxiline or gun-cotton in ether, or in a mixture of ether and alcohol, which forms a useful substitute for adhesive plaster in the case of slight wounds. When the fluid solution is applied to the cut or wound it immediately dries into a semi-transparent, tenacious film, which adheres firmly to the part, and under it the wound or abrasion heals without inflammation. In a slightly modified form colloid is also employed as the basis of a photographic process, called the colloidion process. To obtain a negative picture by the colloidion process a glass plate is covered with a film of colloidion, which is sensitized by a salt (usually the nitrate) of silver, and the plate exposed in the camera. The picture obtained is then developed by the application of a solution of protosulphate of iron, water, glacial acetic acid, and alcohol, and fixed by a solution of hyposulphite of soda or of cyanide of potassium. To obtain a positive picture the negative is laid upon a sheet of paper placed in a glass frame, the paper having been sensitized by immersion in a solution of common sea-salt, and afterwards in one of nitrate of soda. The exposure is continued till the tone is sufficiently deep, after which the tint is improved by means of a salt of gold, and the picture fixed by hyposulphite of soda. Positive pictures may be obtained direct by the colloidion process, but the above is the method most frequently adopted.

Colloidionize (kol-ló'-di-on-íz), v. t. pret. & pp. colloidionized; pp. colloidionizing. In photog. to prepare, as a plate, with colloidion; to treat with colloidion.

Colloidotype (kol-ló'-di-ó-tip), n. A picture produced by the colloidion process, or the method by which such pictures are produced. See under COLLOIDION.

Collogue (kol-lóg'), v. t. [L. colloquor—col, together, and loquor, to speak, the form being probably influenced by colleague.] To confer or converse confidentially and secretly; to converse with deceitful intentions; to lay schemes in concert with another. [Colloq., and often used in a humorous sense.]

He had been colloguing with my wife. Thackeray.

Collogue (kol-lóg'), v. t. To wheedle; to flatter.

They do apply themselves to collogue and flatter their lieges. Burton.

Colloid (kol-ló'id), a. [Gr. kolla, glue, and eidos, resemblance.] Like glue or jelly; specifically, (a) in chem. applied to uncrystallizable liquids. See COLLOID, n. (b) In geol. a term applied to partly amorphous minerals.—Colloid corpuscles is the name given to small cellular bodies existing in the brain normally, and also found in certain morbid products of the body.

Colloid (kol-ló'id), n. The name given by Professor Graham to a transparent, viscid, yellowish, structureless, or slightly granular matter, resembling liquid gelatine. Colloids, as starch, gum, albumen, and gelatine, diffuse through a given septum, as parchment paper, much more slowly than crystallizable liquids. See COLLOID, n. Colloids are highly susceptible of chemical change, hence the organic proximate principles of food, as admitting of easy assimilation, are colloids. Colloids have no power to assume a crystalline form, and they are inert as acids and bases.

Colloidal (kol-ló'id-ál), a. Of or pertaining to or of the nature of colloids.

Colloidal (kol-ló'id-ál-ti), n. Colloidal nature or character. Prof. Graham.

Collop (kól'lop), n. [Probably from a root meaning to beat, the original meaning being thus a piece of meat made tender by beating; comp. Sw. kollops, G. kloppe, both a dish of meat that has been beaten; D. kloppen, G. klopfen, to beat; E. to clap.] 1. A slice or lump of flesh.

He covereth his face with his fatness, and maketh collops of fat on his flanks. Job xv. 27.

God knows thou art a collop of my flesh. Shak.

2. A slice or piece of anything. [Rare.]

This, indeed, with the former, cut two good collops out of the crown land. Fuller.

Colloquial (kol-ló-kwi-ál), a. [See COLLOQUY.] 1. Pertaining to conversation.

His (Johnson's) colloquial talents were, indeed, of the highest order. Macaulay.

2. Peculiar to the language of common conversation; as, a colloquial phrase.

Colloquialism (kol-ló-kwi-ál-izm), n. A word or phrase peculiar to the language of common conversation.

Colloquiality (kol-ló-kwi-ál'-i-ti), n. The state of being colloquial. Worcester. [Rare.]

Colloquialine (kol-ló-kwi-ál-iz), v. t. To make colloquial. Worcester. [Rare.]

Colloquially (kol-ló-kwi-ál-li), adv. In a colloquial or conversational manner; in colloquial language.

Colloquist (kol-ló-kwist), n. A speaker in a dialogue. 'The colloquists in this dialogue.' Malone.

Colloquize (kol-ló-kwiz), v. i. To take part in a colloquy or conversation; to converse. Charlotte Brontë.

Colloquy (kol-ló-kwi), n. [L. colloquium—col, together, and loquor, to speak.] The mutual discourse of two or more; a conference; a dialogue; a conversation.

In retirement make frequent colloquies or short discourses between God and your own soul. Sir Taylor.

Collow (kol-ló'), n. Grime or soot. See COLLY.

Collucancy (kol-luk-tán-si), n. [L. colluctor—col, together, and luctor, to struggle.] A struggling to resist; opposition; contrariety. Bailey.

Colluctation (kol-luk-tá-shon), n. A struggling to resist; wrestling; contest; struggle. 'Colluctation with old hags and hobgoblins.' Dr. H. More.

Collude (kol-lúd'), v. i. pret. colluded; pp. colluding. [L. colludo—col, together, and ludo, to play, to banter, to mock.] To play into the hands of each other; to conspire in a fraud; to act in concert; to connive.

If they let things take their course they will be represented as colluding with sedition. Shaks.

Colluder (kol-lúd-ér), n. One who conspires in a fraud. Milton.

Collum (kol-lum), n. [L., the neck.] In bot. same as Collar, s (b).

Collusion (kol-lú-zhon), n. [L. collusio. See COLLUDE.] 1. Secret agreement for a fraudulent purpose.

These miracles were done publicly, in the face of the world, that there might be no room to suspect artifice or collusion. Atterbury.

2. Specifically, in law, a secret understanding between two parties, who plead or proceed fraudulently against each other to the prejudice of a third person.

Collusive (kol-lú-siv), a. Fraudulently concerted between two or more; as, a collusive agreement. 'Collusive divorces.' Stypps.

Collusively (kol-lú-siv-li), adv. In a collusive manner; by collusion; by secret agreement to defraud.

Collusiveness (kol-lú-siv-nes), n. The quality of being collusive.

Collusory (kol-lú-so-ri), a. Carrying on a fraud by a secret concert; containing collusion; collusive. Bailey.

Collutorium (kol-lú-tó-ri-um), n. [L. colluo, to rinse.] In med. a mouth-wash; a gargle. Dunglison.

Colluvies (kol-lú-vi-és), n. [L.] Filth; excrement; impure matter. Dunglison.

Colly (kol-lí), n. [From A. Sax. col, coal.] The black grime or soot of coal or burned wood. 'Besmeared with soot, colly,' &c. Burton. Written also Collow.

Collyt (kol-lí), v. t. To make foul; to grime with the smut of coal; to blacken. 'Brief as the lightning in the collied night.' Shak. Written also Collow.

Nor hast thou collied thy face enough. B. Jonson.

Colly, n. A kind of dog. See COLLIE.

Collybiat (kol-lí-biat), n. [Gr. kollybiatēs.] A money-changer. By Hall.

Collyrite (kol-lí-rit), n. [Gr. kollyritēs. See below.] A variety of clay of a white colour, with shades of gray, red, or yellow.

Collyrium (kol'li-um), n. [L., from Gr kollyon, an eye-salve, or collyreion, a small roll given to children, from the shape in which the drug was made up.] 1 Eye-salve, eye-wash, a topical remedy for disorders of the eyes. — 2 A preparation of medicine in a solid state, made up in a long cylindrical roll so as to be introduced into some of the openings of the body, as the anus, nostril, etc.

Colmar (kol'mar), n. A sort of pear, so called from the town of Colmar in Alsace.

Colobium (kol'lo-bium), n. [L., from Gr kolobos, mutilated, curtailed.] 1 Arctos. (a) the alacrinous dress of a monk. (b) An episcopal vestment, similar in kind to the tunic, only without sleeves. — 2 A dress worn by a king at his coronation, corresponding to the clerical dalmatica. See Dalmatica.

Coloboma (kol'lo-boma), n. [Gr koloboma, anything mutilated or curtailed.] 1 A wound, a mutilated or maimed organ.

Colocasia (kol'lo-kā-sia), n. [L. and Gr.] A genus of plants, nat. order Araceae, the leaves and tubers of which are acrid. The latter contain much starchy matter, and they are used as food in the south of Europe, after the acrid matter is separated by washing or boiling. This species is supposed to be the alacrinum of Virgil, and is now known as C. antiquorum. C. esculenta, C. macrorrhiza, and others furnish the lard of the Pacific Islands.

Colocynth (kol'lo-sinth), n. [Gr. kolocynthos, bitterwort, the round gourd or pumpkin.] The colocynthis or bitter-apple, a kind of cucumber, the fruit of Colocynthis or Cuscuta. Colocynthis, nat. order Cucurbitaceae, indigenous in the warmer parts of Asia, but now widely cultivated on account of its medicinal properties. The fruit is a round gourd with many seeds embedded in a light and spongy pulp, which is very bitter. From the pulp a watery extract is obtained, which is used as a purgative in the form of pills. The seeds, from which an oil is obtained, are said to be bland and nutritious.

Colocynth (Colocynthis Colocynthis)

Colocyathine, Colocyathine (kol'lo-sin-thin), n. (C₁₀H₁₆O₄) A peculiar substance obtained from colocynth and present more or less in many plants of the gourd family. It is a soft semi-transparent mass resembling some resins, it is very soluble in alcohol, far less so in water, but affords with it a solution of extreme bitterness, and frothing on agitation.

Colopne-earth (kol'lo-pne-arth), n. A kind of light bastard ochre, of a deep brown colour, transparent, and durable in water colour painting. It is an earthy variety of lignite or partially fossilized wood, and occurs in an irregular bed of from 20 to 30 feet deep near Cologne, whence the name.

Colopne-water (kol'lo-pne-wa-ter), n. Same as Res de Colopne.

Cololite (kol'lo-lit), n. [Gr kolos, the colon, and lithos, a stone.] In geol. the name given to what appear to be the petrified intestines of fishes or their contents, but which are more probably worm-casts like those of the tubeworm. They are frequently found in the lithographic sandstone of the colli.

Colombia, Columbia (kol'lo-mia, kol'lo-mia), n. See CALIFORNIA.

Colombier (kol'lo-mi-er), n. Same as Colombier.

Colon (kol'on), n. [Gr kolos, the colon, a member or limb, a stance.] 1 In anat. the great portion of the intestines, forming the middle section of the large intestine. Beginning at the caecum and ascending by the right kidney it passes under the hollow part of the liver and the bottom of the stomach to the spleen, thence descending by the left kidney it passes in the form of an S to the upper part of the os sacrum, where, from its straight course, the canal takes the name of rectum. The colon is distinguished into the right lumbar, or ascending colon; the arch of the colon, or transverse colon; the left lumbar, or descending colon; and the sigmoid flexure, or left sigmoid colon. — 2 In gram. a point or character formed thus [] used to mark a pause greater than that of a semicolon, but less than that of a period, or rather it is used when the sense of the division of a period is complete, as to admit a full point, but something is added by way of illustration or the description is continued by an additional remark, without a necessary dependence on the foregoing members of the sentence. Thus,

A brave arrives at a point of perfection he can never pass in a few years he has all the endowments he is capable of.

Colomet (kol'lo-met), n. [L. colonus, a husbandman.] A peasant, a rustic; a clown. A country clown and fool. Colomet.

Colonel (kol'nel, formerly kol'nel), n. [Formerly also colonel, which is the Spanish form of the word, and has given the modern pronunciation. From Fr colonel, O Fr colonel, from It colonnello, a colonel, also a little column, a dim. of colonna, L. colonna, a column, the name was originally given to the leading company in a regiment.] The chief commander of a regiment of troops, whether infantry or cavalry. Any grade above this converts him into a general-officer belonging to the army collectively, not to one particular regiment. Except in the artillery and engineers, the office of colonel is purely honorary, and is generally conferred on distinguished officers and princes of the blood royal, the real command resting with the lieutenant-colonel in each battalion, who, after five years, becomes a colonel. All colonels, in order of seniority, become general-officers.

Colonel (kol'nel, formerly kol'nel), v. t. To play the part of a colonel or military adventurer, perhaps used only by Butler.

Then did he bright abandon dwelling,
And out he rode a-colonelling. Northumb.

Colonelcy, Colonelship (kol'nel-si, kol'nel-ship), n. The office, rank, or constitution of a colonel.

Colonel (kol'nel), n. Same as Colonel.

Colonial (kol'lo-ni-al), n. [See COLONY.] Pertaining to a colony, as, colonial government, colonial rights.

Colonialism (kol'lo-ni-al-izm), n. A phrase, idiom, or practice peculiar to a colony.

Colonist (kol'lo-ni-st), n. [L. colonus, a husbandman.] Relating to husbandmen.

Colonist (kol'lo-ni-st), n. [See COLONY.] An inhabitant of a colony, a settler in a colony, a member of a colonizing expedition.

Colonitis (kol'lo-ni-tis), n. In med. colitis.

Colonization (kol'lo-ni-zā-shon), n. The act of colonizing or state of being colonized.

Colonizationist (kol'lo-ni-zā-shon-ist), n. An advocate for colonization.

Colonize (kol'lo-ni-zē), v. t. pret. & pp. colonized, ppr. colonizing. 1 To plant or establish a colony in, to send a colony to, as, England colonized Australia. 2 To migrate and settle in, as inhabitants, as, English Puritans colonized New England.

Colonize (kol'lo-ni-zē), v. t. To remove and settle in a distant country, as, to colonize in India.

Colonizer (kol'lo-ni-zēr), n. One who colonizes; one who establishes colonies.

Colonnade (kol'on-nād), n. [It colonnata, from colonna, a column. See COLUMN.] An arch way series or range of columns placed at certain intervals, called intercolumniations, from each other, such intervals varying according to the rules of art and the order employed.

Colony (kol'o-ni), n. [L. colonia, from colere, to cultivate.] 1 A company or body of people transported from their mother-country to a remote province or country to cultivate and inhabit it, and remaining subject to the jurisdiction of the parent state, a body of settlers or their descendants. The inhabitants of a colony generally lose the name of colonists when they cease to be subjects of the parent state. — 2 The country planted or colonized formerly called a plantation. — 3 A number of animals or plants living or growing together, as, colonies of shell-fish, colonies of sponges.

Colony (kol'o-ni), v. t. To colonize. Penelope.

Colophony (kol'o-fō-ni), n. Same as Colophony.

Colophene (kol'o-fēn), n. A viscid aromatic oil obtained by the rapid distillation of colophony, or by distilling oil of turpentine with strong sulphuric acid, the product being afterwards purified in both cases. It is a hydrocarbon.

Colophony (kol'o-fō-ni), n. A term appellative of one of the acids present in colophony. It is produced by the action of heat on picnic acid, and is the least soluble of all the colophonic acids in alcohol.

Colophon (kol'o-fōn), n. [Gr. kolophon, a summit, top, finishing.] A device, or printer's mark, place of publication, and date, formerly put at the conclusion of a book.

Colophonian (kol'o-fō-ni-an), n. Relating to a colophon or the conclusion of a book.

Colophonic (kol'o-fō-ni-k), n. [See COLOPHONY.] A term appellative of the resinous acids — picnic, picmaric, stylic, and colophonic present in colophony. They are all isomeric, their common formula being C₁₀H₈O₄.

Colophonite (kol'o-fō-ni-ti), n. A variety of garnet, of a reddish yellow or brown colour, occurring in small amorphous granular masses so called from its resemblance in colour to colophony.

Colophony (kol'o-fō-ni), n. [Gr kolophonia, from kolophon, a city of Ionia, whence the Greeks obtained it.] In phar. black resin or turpentine boiled in water and dried, or the residuum, after distillation of the ethereal oil of turpentine, being further urged by a more intense and long continued fire. It is for the most part a mixture of several resinous acids. See COLOPHONIC.

Colocynthids (kol'lo-kwin-thids), n. [Gr. kolocynthos, bitterwort.] The colocynth or bitter-apple. See COLOCYTHA.

The first that to him now is as lucidous as locusts, shall be to him shortly as bitter as colocynthids. Shak.

Color (ku'lar), n. An old and common Anglican spelling of Colour.

Colorado Beetle (kol'o-rā-dō bēt), n. A coleopterous insect (Chrysomela or Polysphondylium), family Chrysomelidae, belonging to the tetramerous section of the order. In size it is somewhat larger Colorado Beetle (Chrysomela discolorata).

1, Part of leaf with eggs of the insect. 2, Larva. 3, Adult insect. (All not life.)

than a pea, nearly oval, convex, of a yellowish or ochre yellow colour, marked with black spots and blotches, and on the elytra with ten black longitudinal stripes. The wings, which are folded under the elytra, are of a bluish-red colour. This insect, a native of the south-western states of North America, works great havoc among the potato crops.

Colorate (ku'lar-dā), n. [L. coloratus, from color, to colour.] Coloured, dyed or tinged with some colour. 'Had the tunicles and humours of the eye been colorate.' Ray. [Rare.]

Coloration (ku'lar-dā-shon), n. [L. color.] The art or practice of colouring, or the state of being coloured, colouring.

The most serious objection to the increase of the aperture of object-glasses, was the coloration of the image produced. Whewell.

Colorature (ku'lar-dā-tūr), n. In music, all manner of variations, trills, etc. intended to make a song agreeable, and corresponding in some degree with the intermingling of various shades of colour with a view to harmony. Called also Coloring.

Colorite (ku'lar-dā-ti), n. [L. color, colour, and terre, to make.] Having the quality of tinging, able to give colour or tint to other bodies.

Colorimeter (kol'o-rim-ē-tēr), n. [L. color, colour, and Gr metron, a measure.] An instrument for measuring the depth of colour in a liquid by comparison with a standard liquid of the same tint.

Colossal (kô-lo's'al), a. Like a colossus; much exceeding the size of nature; very large; huge; gigantic.

Colosse (kô-lo's'), n. Same as Colossus. [Rare.] There huge colosse rose, with trophies crowned. And Runick characters were grav'd around. Pope.

Colosseum (kô-lo's'e-um), a. Like a colossus; gigantic; colossal. 'Among others he mentions the colosseum statue of Juno.' Harris. Colosseum (kô-lo's'e-um), n. [L. from Gr. kolossos, a gigantic, colossal statue.] A name given to the Flavian Amphitheatre in Rome, a large edifice for gladiatorial combats, fights of wild beasts, and similar sports. It was begun by Vespasian, and finished by Titus, 80 A.D. The outline of the Colosseum is elliptic, the exterior length of the building being 620, and its breadth 513 feet; it is pierced with eighty openings or vomitoria in the ground story, over which are superimposed three other stories, the whole rising perpendicularly to the height of 160 feet. Written also Coliseum. See AMPHITHEATRE.

Colossot (kô-lo's'ot), a. Colossal. 'Colossot statues.' Chapman.

Colossochelys (kô-lo's'o-kel-is), n. [Gr. kolossos, a colossus, and chelys, a tortoise.] A genus of gigantic tortoises, found in a fossil state in India. One species is known, named by its discoverers C. atlas, from its immense size, the remains indicating a length of twelve or fourteen feet.

Colossus (kô-lo's'us), n. pl. Colossi (kô-lo's'i) or rarely Colossuses (kô-lo's'us-es). [Gr. kolossos, a gigantic colossal statue.] A statue of a gigantic size. One of the most remarkable was that at Rhodes, a statue of Apollo, so high that it is said ships might sail between its legs. There is, however, no satisfactory authority for the popularly received statement that its legs extended over the mouth of the harbour.

He doth bestride this narrow world

Like a Colossus. Shak.

In that idle he also defaced an hundred other colossuses. Sir T. Herbert.

Colossus-wise (kô-lo's'us-wiz), adv. In the manner of a colossus; astride, as the colossus at Rhodes was believed to have stood. Shak.

Colostrum (kô-lo's'trum), n. [L.] 1. The first milk secreted in the breasts after childbirth.—2. An emulsion made by mixing turpentine and yolk of eggs.

Colour (kul'er), n. [L. color, colour.] 1. That in respect of which bodies have a different appearance to the eye independently of their form. It is a property or attribute of light rather than of bodies themselves, though the molecular constitution of a body, by determining the character and number of the light vibrations it returns to the eye, determines its colour. In perfect darkness bodies have no colour. The principal colours are red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, and violet; but they all admit of almost endless gradations of shade. These are sometimes called the primary colours, being the colours into which white light is divided by a glass prism, but in a stricter sense the primary colours are three in number, namely, red, green, and violet (or blue). These three colours or kinds of light cannot be resolved into any others, while a yellow ray for instance can be resolved into red and green, or can be produced by the mingling of red and green light, consequently yellow is not now regarded as a primary colour by scientific men. Inasmuch, however, as a yellow and a blue pigment will always produce a green when mixed, red, yellow, and blue may still in a sense be regarded as primary. In the scientific sense of the word white and black are not considered colours, a white body reflecting and a black body absorbing all the rays of light without separating them, whereas the colours proper are due to separation of the rays of light by partial absorption and reflection, or by refraction.—2. The blood-red hue of the face; redness; complexion.

Then the Captain's colour heighten'd,
Joyful came his speech. Tamemore.

3. Fig. that which serves to hide the real character of something and give a false appearance; appearance; false show; pretence; guise.

Why hunt I then for colour or excuses? Shak.

Under the colour of commending him,
I have access my own love to prefer. Shak.

4. Kind; species; sort; variety; character. Boys and women are, for the most part, cattle of this colour. Shak.

5. That which is used for colouring; a pigment; paint, as red-lead, ochre, orpiment, cinnabar, or vermilion, &c.—6. pl. (a) A flag, ensign, or standard borne in an army or fleet. See FLAG. (b) A colour used as a badge; as, the colours of a party; the colours of Oxford or Cambridge.—7. In law, an apparent or prima facie right, a sufficient warrant for action; formerly also colour (or express colour) was a probable but really false plea, the design of which was to draw the decision of the cause from the jury to the judges, by making the point to be decided appear to be one of law and not of fact. 8. In phren. one of the perceptive faculties, its supposed function being that of giving the power of perceiving colours or of distinguishing their shades.—Complementary colours, colours which together make white; thus, any of the primary colours is complementary to the other two.—Local colours, those which are natural to a particular object in a picture, and by which it is distinguished from other objects.—Neutral colours, those in which the hue is broken by partaking of the reflected colours of the objects which surround them.—Positive colours, those unbroken by such accidents as affect neutral colours.—Primary colours. See above.—Prismatic colours, colours produced by transmitting white light through colourless prismatic bodies, as a triangular glass prism. See SPECTRUM.—Subjective or accidental colours. See ACCIDENTAL.—Persons of colour, members of the darker varieties of mankind, as negroes, mulattoes, &c.

Marriages between white men and women of colour are by no means rare. McCulloch.

—Colour, Hue. See HUE.

Colour (kul'er), v.t. 1. To change or alter the external colour or hue of a body or substance; to dye; to tinge; to paint; to stain. 2. Fig. to clothe with an appearance different from the real; to give a specious appearance; to set in a fair light; to palliate; to excuse; to make plausible.

Colourably (kul'er-a-bl), adv. Speciously; plausibly; with a fair external appearance.

Colour-blind (kul'er-blind), a. Incapable of accurately distinguishing colours; having an imperfect perception of colour. See following article.

Colour-blindness (kul'er-blind-nes), n. Total or partial incapability of distinguishing colours. Dr. George Wilson of Edinburgh has divided colour-blindness into three grades: (a) Inability to discern any colour, so that light and shade, or black and white, are the only variations perceived. (b) Inability to distinguish the nicer shades of the more composite colours, as browns, grays, and neutral tints. (c) Inability to distinguish between the primary colours, red, blue, and yellow, or between them and their secondaries, green, purple, orange, and brown. Red is the colour which the colour-blind are most commonly unable to distinguish, while yellow is the most easily recognized. Colour-blindness occurs in eyes whose power of vision, as to form and distance, is quite perfect. This defect is common especially among men. Of 1154 persons examined in Edinburgh, 65, or 1 in 17.7, were found colour-blind. Called also Daltonism. Colour-box (kul'er-boks), n. A portable box for holding artists' colours, brushes, &c. Coloured (kul'er'd), p. and a. 1. Having a colour; dyed; tinged; painted or stained.—2. Having some other colour than white or black; as, a coloured ribbon.—3. A term applied to the darker varieties of mankind.—4. In bot. applied to a leaf, calyx, seed, &c., to express any colour except green.—5. Having a specious appearance.

Columba (kol-um'bā), n. [L.] 1. A Linnaean genus of birds now constituting the family Columbidae (which see). 2. In the medieval church, the name given to the vessel in which the sacrament was kept, from its being made in the shape of a dove. It was of precious metal, and stood on a circular platform or basin, had a sort of corona above it, and was suspended by a chain from the roof, before the high altar. The opening was in the back. — Columba Noach, Noah's Dove, a constellation in the southern hemisphere, close to the hinder feet of Canis Major, consisting of ten stars.

Columbaceæ (kol-um'bā-sē), n. pl. [L. columba, a pigeon.] A sub-order of avian birds, comprising the pigeons, and often raised to the rank of a distinct order under the name of Columba. They constitute with the domestic fowl and its congeners (Gallinaceæ) the order Resores. They are distinguished from the Gallinaceæ by having stronger wings, and therefore much greater power of flight, by feet more slender and better adapted for perching on trees, by the hinder toe resting on the ground, and by their young being brought forth naked and in a helpless state, whilst those of the Gallinaceæ are able to take care of themselves as soon as they leave the shell. They are all monogamous, and pair for life. Many of them are kept in a domestic state, and their varieties are very numerous. All the common breeds, however, appear to be descended from the rock-pigeon (Columba livia), which has retained its distinguishing peculiarities for at least many centuries. See FRESCO, GALLINACEÆ.

Columbæ (kol-um'bē), n. pl. An order of birds comprising the pigeons. See COLUMBACEÆ.

Columbarium (kol-um-bā'ri-um), n. pl. Columbaria (kol-um-bā'ri-ā), n. [L., a pigeon-house.] 1. In Rome, any place of sepulture for the ashes of the dead, after the custom of burning the dead had been introduced. Columbaria consisted of arched and square-headed recesses formed in walls in Column (kol'ū-m), n. [L. columina, a column. From root col, col, col, which appears in collis, a hill, culmen, a summit, census, high, &c.] 1. A solid body of considerably greater length than thickness, standing upright, and generally serving as a support to something resting on its top, a pillar, more specifically, as an architectural term, a long solid body, called a shaft, set vertically on a stylobate, or on a concourse of mouldings which forms its base, and surmounted by a spreading mass which forms its capital. Columns are distinguished by the names of the styles of architecture to which they belong, thus there are Hindu, Egyptian, Grecian, Roman, and Gothic columns. In classic architecture they are further distinguished by the name of the order to which they belong, as Doric, Ionic, or Corinthian columns, and again by some peculiarity of position, of construction, of form, or of ornament, as attached, twisted, cabled, or rudented and carolytic columns. Columns are chiefly used in the construction or adornment of buildings. They have also been used, however, singly for various purposes. Thus there are the astronomical columns, from which astronomical observations are made; the chronological columns, inscribed with a record of historical events, the gnomonic columns, which supports a dial, the itinerary columns, pointing out the various roads diverging from it, the military columns, set up as a centre from which to measure distances, the triumphal columns, dedicated to the hero of a victory, and many others. — 2. Anything resembling a column in shape, any body pressing perpendicularly on its base, and of the same diameter as its base, as, a column of water, air, or mercury. — 3. In bot. the united stamens and styles of the plants when they form a solid central body, as in the genus Orchis. — 4. Naut. a formation of troops, narrow in front, and deep from front to rear; thus distinguished from line, which is extended in front, and

Comb-honey (kôm'hun-i), n. See extract. The bulk of this, however, was sent in jars either as pure extracted honey or as comb-honey—that is, honey bottled with portions of broken comb remaining in it. Times newspaper.

Combina (kôm-bin'a-bl), a. Capable of combining or of being combined.

Pleasures are very combina both with business and study. Chatterfield.

Combina (kôm-bin'a-bl-nes), n. State of being combinable.

Combinate (kôm'bi-nât), a. Espoused; betrothed. 'Her combinate husband.' Shak.

Combinate-venose (kôm'bi-nât-vê-nôz), a. In bot. a term denoting a leaf whose lateral veins unite before they reach the margin.

Combination (kôm-bin'a-shon), n. [L. L. combinatio, Fr. combinaison. See COMBINE.] 1. A coming together or uniting; union of particulars; concurrence; meeting; as, a combination of circumstances. — 2. Intimate union or association of two or more persons or things, by set purpose or agreement for effecting some object, by joint operation. — 3. Com-mixture; union of bodies or qualities in a mass or compound; union by affinity; chemical union; as, to make new compounds by new combinations. — Laws of chemical combination, the laws which regulate the union of substances by chemical affinity. See under CHEMICAL and EQUIVALENT. — 4. In math. the union of a number of individuals in different groups, each containing a certain number of the individuals. Thus the number of combinations of four individuals taking two together, is six (12, 13, 14, 23, 24, 34). — Combination room, in the University of Cambridge, a room into which the fellows withdraw after dinner, for wine, dessert, and conversation. — Party, Faction, Cabal, Junto, Combination. See under C.A.BAL.

Combina (kôm-bin'a-tiv), a. Tending to combine; uniting. [Rare.]

Combinatory (kôm-bin'a-tor-i), a. Same as Combina.

Combine (kôm-bin'), v. t. pret. & pp. combined; ppr. combining. [Fr. combiner, from the L. L. combinare—com, and binus, two and two, or double.] To unite or join; to link closely together. 'So stily them in pairs thou hast combined.' Shak.

Combine (kôm-bin'), v. i. 1. To unite, agree, or coalesce; as, honour and policy combine to justify the measure. — 2. To unite in friendship or alliance; to league together; to associate; followed by with.

their brightly-coloured showy flowers, especially in the genus Combretum. The Myrobalan nuts, which are used as tonics, are furnished by Terminalia Bellerica, one of the plants of the order.

Combretum (kom-bré-tum), n. [A kind of rush.] The type genus of the order Combretaceae.

Combre-world, n. An encumbrance to the world. Chaucer.

Combust (kom-bust'), a. [L. combustus, comburo. See COMBUSTIBLE.] In astron. a term applied to a planet when so near the sun as to be obscured by it, or when not more than 84° from it. 'Planets that are oft combust.' Milton.

Combust (kom-bust'), v. t. To burn. Dickens. [Rare; humorous.]

Combustibility (kom-bust'i-bil'i-ti), n. Same as Combustibleness.

Combustible (kom-bust'i-bl), a. [Fr. combustible, from L. comburo, combustum, to consume—comb, for cum or con, and urō, to burn; same root as Gr. αἶω, to kindle; Skr. uśā, to burn.] 1. Capable of taking fire and burning; thus, wood and coal are combustible bodies.—2. Easily excited; fiery; irascible: said of persons.

Arnold was a combustible character. Irving.

Combustible (kom-bust'i-bl), n. A substance that will take fire and burn; as, wood and coal are combustibles. For distinction between combustibles and supporters of combustion, see COMBUSTION.

Combustibleness (kom-bust'i-bl-ness), n. The state or quality of being combustible or taking fire and burning; capacity of being burned.

Combustion (kom-bust'yun), n. [L. L. combustio, from comburo, combustum. See COMBUSTIBLE, a.] 1. The operation of fire on inflammable substances; burning; or, in chemical language, the union of an inflammable substance with oxygen or some other supporter of combustion, attended with heat, and in most instances with light.

Any chemical action whatsoever, if its energy rise sufficiently high, may produce the phenomenon of combustion by heating the body to such an extent that it becomes luminous. Geo. Fresenius.

2. Tumult; violent agitation with hurry and noise; confusion; uproar.

These cruel wars . . . brought all England into an horrible combustion. Raleigh.

—Spontaneous combustion, the ignition of a body by the internal development of heat without the application of an external flame. It not infrequently takes place among heaps of rags, wool, and cotton when lubricated with oil, and hay, straw, and coal when damp or moistened with water. (See EREMACAUTIS.) The term is also applied to the extraordinary alleged phenomenon of the rapid destruction of the human body by being reduced to ashes without the direct application of fire. It is said to have occurred in the aged and persons that were fat and hard drinkers. The chemical changes which would produce this result are not well understood, and many chemists, including Liebig, reject the theory altogether, maintaining that none of the instances adduced are well authenticated.—Supporters of combustion. Though the action between the gas and the more solid material, as coal, wood, charcoal, of whose combination combustion is the result, is mutual, the one having as much to do with the process as the other, yet the former, as oxygen, chlorine, iodine, and the compounds which they form with each other and with nitrogen, have received the name of supporters of combustion, while to the latter the term combustibles has been assigned.—Invisible combustion, a term applied by Sir H. Davy to those phenomena of combustion which are effected without the disengagement of light, as when oxygen and hydrogen, confined in tubes, are carefully exposed to a high temperature.

Combustious, Combustuous (kom-bust'yu, kom-bust'yu-s), a. Combustible; inflammable. 'Dry, combustious matter.' Shak.

Combustive (kom-bust'iv), a. Disposed to take fire. Bp. Gauden.

Come (kum), v. i. pret. came; part. come; ppr. coming. [A. Sax. cuman, pret. com, pp. cumen, also cūman, cūam or cūom, cūmen, to come, to happen; cog. D. komen, Icel. koma, Dan. komme, Sw. komma, O. H. G. queman, Mod. G. kommen, Goth. quēman; more remotely from same root, L. venio (for venio), to come; Gr. βαίνω (for gēnō), to go; Skr. gam, to go.] 1. To move hitherward; to advance nearer in any manner and from any distance; to approach the person speaking or writing, or the person addressed: opposed to go; as, I hope he will come to-night; he went on till he came to another village; I shall come to see you some time soon. Formerly the verb to come in this sense was frequently used with an infinitive not preceded by to. 'Thoroughfares for princes to come view fair Portia.' Shak.—2. Of time and what happens in time in the sense of to arrive, take place; hence, to come = future. (See end of article.)

Ye shall not see me, until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord. Luke xiii. 35.

All my time will I wait, till my change come. Job xiv. 14.

3. To reach a certain stage or point of progress; to arrive at: followed by an infinitive; as, I now come to consider the next branch of the subject (= I now arrive at the consideration of, &c.). When the writer or speaker uses come in a transition of this sort he refers to what precedes to the ground he has already passed over; when he has in view mainly the ground that he has yet to pass over he uses go on or proceed—I will now go on, or I now proceed to consider, &c. 'How'er you come to know it' (= how'er you have arrived at the knowledge of it). Shak.—4. To get into a certain state or condition: especially followed by to be; as, how did you come into this scrape? how come you to be so melancholy? (See also phrases below.) Formerly this word was frequently used in constructions where get would now be probably used or to be made to follow the come. 'How came my man I' the stocks?' Shak. This use, though not quite obsolete, is now comparatively rare.—5. To happen or fall out: to befall. 'How comes that?' Shak. 'Come what will.' Shak.

All things come alike to all. Ecc. ix. 2. So comes it you have been mistook. Shak.

6. To advance or move into view; to appear; as, blood or colour comes into the face.

It is reported that if you lay a good stock of kernels of grapes about the root of a vine it will make the vine come earlier and prosper better. Bacon.

7. To become. [This might be classed under 4—regarding to be as omitted.]

So came I a widow. Shak.

8. To accrue or result from; to be formed by; to appear; as, the butter comes.

Usefulness comes by labour, wit by ease. G. Herbert. Frequently with of.

This comes of judging by the eye. Sir R. L' Etrange.

9. Come, in the imperative, is used to excite attention, or to invite to motion or joint action; as, come, let us go.

This is the heir; come, let us kill him. Mat. xxi. 38. When repeated, or followed by now, I say, and the like, it expresses increased earnestness, or haste, impatience, remonstrance, or rebuke.

Come, come, open the matter in brief. Shak. Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord. J. i. 18.

'Come, I say,' he remonstrated, 'you are taking the thing too much to heart.' W. Black.

[Certain of the compound tenses of this verb were once regularly and are still frequently formed with the verb be instead of have. See BE, 4 (b).]—To come and go, to alternate; to appear and disappear.

The colour of the king doth come and go Between his purpose and his conscience. Shak.

—To come about, (a) to happen; to fall out; to come to pass; to arrive; as, how did these things come about? (b) To turn; to change; to come round; as, the wind will come about from west to east; the ship comes about.

On better thoughts and my urged reasons, They are come about and won to the true side. B. Jonson.

Wine, wax-light, comestible, rouge, &c., would go to the dance if people did not act upon their silly principles. Thackeray.

Comet (kom'et), n. [L. cometa, from Gr. kōmētēs, long-haired, from kōmē, hair from the appearance of its tail.] The name given to certain celestial bodies which appear at irregular intervals, moving through the heavens in paths which seem to correspond with parabolic curves, or in a few instances in elliptical orbits of great eccentricity.

View of Donati's Comet.—Illustrated London News.

The former, after being visible from the earth for a shorter or longer time, disappear into space apparently never to return, the latter return to us periodically. Some comets are only visible by the aid of the telescope, while others can be seen by the naked eye. In the latter case they usually appear like stars accompanied with a train of light, sometimes short and sometimes extending over half the sky, mostly single and more or less curved, but sometimes forked. In a comet which appeared in 1744 the train was divided into several branches, spreading out from the head like the blades of an open fan. The train is not stationary relatively to the head, but is subject to remarkable movements. The direction in which it points is always opposite to the sun, and as the comet passes its perihelion the train changes its apparent position with extraordinary velocity. The head of the comet is itself of different degrees of luminosity, there being usually a central core, called the nucleus, of greater brilliancy than the surrounding envelope, called the coma. The paths in which comets move are not, like those of the planets, all nearly in the same plane as the orbit of the earth, but are inclined to that orbit at all angles, and the motion of the comets along their paths is sometimes direct, that is, in the same direction as that of the earth and the other planets, sometimes retrograde. The matter of which comets is composed is so transparent that the faintest stars are seen through them without the slightest diminution of their lustre, and in one instance at least was shown to be of extreme tenuity. This was in the case of the comet of 1779, which became entangled among the satellites of Jupiter and yet exerted no disturbing influence on their course. The most remarkable discovery of recent times regarding comets is the identity of the course of some of them with the orbit of certain showers of shooting-stars. This was first demonstrated by the Italian astronomer Schiaparelli, who proved the agreement between the orbit of the great comet of 1861 and that of the star-shower seen annually about August 9, 10. It is, however, denied that the comets themselves can be identified with the star-showers, as the two phenomena are seen in different parts of the orbit, and Zöllner has suggested that comets may be the solid portions and star-showers the solid fragments of a larger celestial body. One of the most remarkable comets of recent years was that known as Donati's, discovered by Dr. Donati of Florence in 1864. It was very brilliant in England in the autumn of that year, and on the 18th of October was near coming into collision with Venus.—Comet wine, wine made in any of the years in which comets have been seen, and supposed in consequence to have a superior flavour.

The old Germanen put autumn wine for bottling of the famous comet year (i.e. 1811), emphatically called comet wine. Thackeray.

Like commendation ninepence, crooked,
With 'To and from my love,' it looked.

Hudibras.

Commendator (kom-mend-a-tér), n. One who holds a benefice in commendam. In Scotland, in Roman Catholic times, the commendator was a secular person by whom the fruits of a benefice were levied during a vacancy. He was properly a steward or trustee; but the pope assumed the power of appointing them for life, without any obligation to account. This led to a prohibition (1466, III.) of all commendams excepting those granted by bishops for a term not exceeding six months.

Commendatory (kom-mend'a-tor-i), a. 1. Serving to commend; presenting to favourable notice or reception; containing praise; as, a commendatory letter. — 2. Commisariat (kom-mis-ā-ri-āt), n. (Fr. See COMMISSARIAT.) 1. The department of an army whose duties consist in supplying transports, provisions, forage, camp, equipage, &c., to the troops; also, the body of officers in that department. In 1858 and 1859 the British commissariats were reorganized, and remained a war-office department, under a commissary-general-in-chief, until 1870, when it was merged, with other supply departments, in the control department, which performs all the civil administrative duties of the army.—2. The office or employment of a commissary.—3. In Scots law, the jurisdiction of a commissary; the district of country over which the authority or jurisdiction of a commissary extends. See extract.

The inferior commisariats, which had usually been commensurate with the dioceses, had been abolished by a previous statute, each county being erected into a separate commisariat, of which the sheriff is commissary. Chambers's Ency.

Commissary (kom-mis-sar-i), n. (Fr. Commissaire, L.L. commissarius, one to whom any trust or duty is delegated, from L. com-mitto, commisum, to commit, intrust to—com, and mitto, missum, to send.) 1. In a general sense, a commissioner; one to whom is committed some charge, duty, or office by a superior power; one who is sent or delegated to execute some office or duty in the place, or as the representative, of his superior.—2. Eccles. an officer of the bishop who exercises spiritual jurisdiction in remote parts of a diocese, or one intrusted with the performance of the duties in the bishop's absence.—3. In Scots law, the judge in a commissary-court; in present practice, the sheriff of each county acting in the commissary-court. See COMMISSARY-COURT.—4. Milit. a name given to officers or officials of various kinds, especially to officers of the commissariat department, and in the English army also to officers in the ordnance store department. A commissary general ranks with a major-general, a deputy commissary general with a colonel, a commissary with a major, a deputy commissary with a captain, an assistant commissary with a lieutenant. In the United States, an officer whose duty is to furnish food for the army is called the commissary of subsistence.

Commissary-court (kom-mis-sar-i-kōrt), n. In Scots law, (a) a supreme court established in Edinburgh in the sixteenth century, to which were transferred the duties formerly discharged by the bishops' commissaries. It had jurisdiction in actions of divorce, declarator of marriage, nullity of marriage, and the like. Its powers having come gradually to be conjoined with those of the Court of Session, the court was abolished in 1836. (b) A sheriff or county court which decrees and confirms executors to deceased persons leaving personal property in Scotland, and discharges relative incidental functions. The sheriff, as judge of this court, in certain actions has the title of commissary, the county over which the court has jurisdiction being his commissariat.

Commissure (kom-mis-sūr), n. (Fr. commissure, from L. commissura, a joining to—air.' Shak. 'Such actions as the common good requireth.' Hooker. 'Things common by nature.' Locke. 'Set me in the common stocks.' Shak. —3. Of frequent or usual occurrence; not extraordinary; general; frequent; usual; ordinary; habitual. 'The commonest operations in nature.' Swift.

It is no act of common passage, but
A strain of rareness. Shak.

4. Not distinguished by rank or character; not of superior excellence; ordinary; of low or mean rank or character; as, a common soldier. 'Grow yourselves to common players.' Shak. 'Sort our nobles from our common men.' Shak. 'The common matter-of-fact world of sense and sight.' Dr. Caird. 5. Prostitute; lewd. 'A dame who herself was common.' Sir R. L'Estrange. —6. In gram. applied (a) to a verb that signifies both action and passion, as Latin aspernor, I despise or am despised; (b) to such nouns as are both masculine and feminine, as parent; (c) to such nouns as are the names of all the objects possessing the attributes denoted by the noun: in this sense opposed to proper; as, river is a common noun, but Thames is a proper one. —Common bail. See BAIL. —Common bench, the Court of Common Pleas. —Common bud, in bot. that which is at once a leaf-bud and a flower-bud. —Common carrier. See CARRIER. —Common centering, centering without a truss, but with merely a tie-beam. —Common chord. See CHORD. —Common council, the council of a city or corporate town, empowered to make by-laws for the government of the citizens. The common councils sometimes consist of two houses, chambers, or courts, and sometimes form only one. Thus the common council of London consists of two houses, the upper house, composed of the lord-mayor and aldermen, elected for life, and the lower house of the common council men, elected annually. —Common council man, a member of a common council. —Common divisor, or common measure, in math. a number or quantity that divides two or more numbers or quantities without leaving a remainder. —Common good, in Scots law, in its widest sense, all the property of a corporation over which the magistrates have a power of administration solely for behoof of the corporation. —Common law, the unwritten law, the law that receives its binding force from immemorial usage and universal reception, in distinction from the written or statute law; sometimes from the civil or canon law; and occasionally from the lex mercatoria, or commercial and maritime jurisprudence. It consists of that body of rules, principles, and customs which have been received from our ancestors, and by which courts have been guided in their judicial decisions. The evidence of this law is to be found in the reports of those decisions and the records of the courts. Some of these rules may have originated in edicts or statutes which are now lost, or in the terms and conditions of particular grants or charters; but it is quite certain that many of them originated in judicial decisions founded on natural justice and equity, or on local customs. Wherever statute law, however, runs counter to common law, the latter is entirely overruled; but common law, on the other hand, asserts its pre-eminence where equity is opposed to it. By the Judicature Act, 1873, all branches of the Supreme Court of Judicature are to administer law and equity concurrently. —Common measure. See above, Common Divisor. —Common pasturage, in Scots law, a known rural servitude by which the owner of the dominant tenement is entitled to pasture a certain number of cattle on the grass grounds of the servient tenement. —Common Pleas, formerly one of the three superior courts of common law in England, presided over by a lord chief-justice and five (at an earlier period four) puisne judges, and having cognizance of all civil causes, real, personal, or mixed, as well by original writ as by removal from the inferior courts. It is now a division of the High Court of Justice. Courts bearing this title exist in several of the United States, having, in some cases, both civil and criminal jurisdiction over the whole state. In other states the jurisdiction is limited to a county. —Common Prayer, the liturgy or public form of prayer prescribed by the Church of England to be used in all churches and chapels, and which the clergy are to use under a certain penalty.

The Book of Common Prayer is used also by the English speaking Episcopal churches in Scotland, Ireland, America, and the colonies, as well as by some non-episcopal bodies, with or without certain alterations. —Common seal, a seal used by a corporation as the symbol of their incorporation. —Common sense, (a) † a supposed sense which was held to be the common bond of all the others. (b) Sound practical judgment; the natural sagacity or understanding of mankind in general, in contradistinction to the endowments of genius or the acquisitions of learning; good sense in relation to common things or business.

There is a certain degree of sense which is necessary to our being subjects of law or government, capable of managing our own affairs, and answerable for our conduct to others. This is called common sense, because it is common to all men with whom we can transact business. Rid.

Common sense (the philosophy of) is that philosophy which accepts the testimony of our faculties as trustworthy within their respective spheres, and rests all human knowledge on certain first truths or primitive beliefs, which are the constitutive elements or fundamental forms of our rational nature and the regulating principles of our conduct. Fleming.

—Common sergeant, a judicial officer of the corporation of the city of London; an assistant to the recorder. —Common time, in music, time or rhythm with two, four, or eight beats to a bar. Called also Double or Duple Time. —In common, equally with another, or with others; to be equally used or participated by two or more; as, tenants in common; to provide for children in common; to assign lands to two persons in common, or to twenty in common; we enjoy the bounties of Providence in common. —Common, General, Universal. Common merely denotes what may frequently be met with, or what is ordinary, but it does not necessarily imply a majority; general, stronger than common, implies a majority; universal and general are related to one another as the whole to the part; general includes the greater part or number, or admits of exceptions; universal takes in every individual, and admits of no exceptions.

Common (kom'mon), n. 1. A tract of ground, the use of which is not appropriated to an individual, but belongs to the public or to a number. —2. In law, (a) an open ground, or that soil the use of which belongs equally to the inhabitants of a town or of a lordship, or to a certain number of proprietors. (b) The profit which a man has in the land of another. (c) A right which a person has to pasture his cattle on land of another, or to dig turf, or catch fish, or cut wood, or the like; called common of pasture, of turbarry, of piscary, and of estovers. Common, or right of common, is said to be appendant, appurtenant, because of vicinage, or in gross. Common appendant is a right belonging to the owners or occupiers of arable land to put commonable beasts upon the lord's waste, and upon the lands of other persons within the same manor. This is a matter of most universal right. Common appurtenant may be annexed to lands in other lordships, or extend to other beasts besides those which are generally commonable: this is not of common right, but can be claimed only by immemorial usage and prescription. Common because of vicinage, or neighbourhood, is where the inhabitants of two townships, lying contiguous to each other, have usually intercommoned with one another, the beasts of the one straying into the other's fields: this is a permissive right. Common in gross or at large, is annexed to a man's person, being granted to him and his heirs by deed; or it may be claimed by prescriptive right, as by a parson of a church or other corporation sole. —3. pl. See COMMONS.

Common (kom'mon), v.t. 1. † To participate in common; to enjoy or suffer in common. 'We communed of sorrow and heaviness.' Sir T. More. —2. Compass (kum-pas'), n. [Fr. sp. and pg. compass; L. compassus, a circle—L. com, and passus, a step.] 1 A passing round; a circular course, a circuit.

Time is come round;
And where I did begin, there shall I end;
My life is run his compass. Shak.

They fetched a compass of seven days' journey. R. Ki. iii. 5.

2 Limit or boundary; reach; extent; range; applied to time, space, sound, &c. 'And in that compass all the world contains.' Dryden. 'In the compass of three little words.' Tennyson.

You would sound me from my lowest note to the top of my compass. Shak.

3 Moderate estimate; limits of truth; moderation; due limits: usually with within.

In two hundred years before (I speak within compass), no such commission had been executed.

4 An instrument used to indicate the magnetic meridian or the position of objects with respect to that meridian. The mariner's or ship compass consists of three parts: namely, the box, the card or fly, and the needle. The box, which contains the card and needle, is a circular brass receptacle, hung within a wooden one by two concentric rings called gimbals, so fixed by the cross-centres to the box that the inner one, or compass-box, shall retain an horizontal position in all motions of the ship. The circular card is divided into thirty-two equal parts by lines drawn from the centre to the circumference, called points or rhumbs, the intervals between the points are also divided into halves and quarters, and the whole circumference into equal parts or degrees, 360 of which complete the circle, and, consequently, the distance or angle comprehended between any two rhumbs is equal to 1½°. The four principal are called cardinal points: viz. North, South, East, and of the points, by the property of the needle, will always be directed towards the north pole. The needle, however, is liable to a certain deviation owing to the magnetism of the ship itself, and this is especially strong in iron ships. (See Deviation of the compass, under DEVIATION.) To obviate this defect Sir W. Thomson has invented a compass having a number of needles arranged in a particular manner instead of one. In the compass used by land-surveyors and others the needle is not fixed to the card, but plays alone, the card being drawn on the bottom of the box.—The azimuth compass differs in some respects from the foregoing. See AZIMUTH.—Hanging compass, a mariner's compass suspended with its face downwards to the roof of a cabin or to a pole on deck. In the former position it is sometimes called a Tell-tale, because it shows to one below if the proper course of the ship is maintained by the steersman.—5 A mathematical instrument for describing circles, measuring figures, distances between two points, &c.: often with the plural designation compasses, or a pair of compasses.

In his hand
He took the golden compasses, prepared
In God's eternal store, to circumscribe
The universe and all created things. Milton.

—Common compasses, or dividers, consist simply of two pointed legs, movable on a joint or pivot, and used for measuring and transferring distances. For describing circles the lower end of one of the legs is removed, and its place supplied by a holder for a pencil or pen.—Hair compasses, compasses having a spring attached to the upper part of the inside of one of the legs, and pressing outwards against the lower part of the other, thus constantly tending to keep the legs apart. By means of a finely-threaded screw the spring can be compressed or relaxed with the utmost nicety, and the distance of the legs regulated to a hair's breadth. See compass, the name given to several instruments for measuring distances, describing arcs, &c., having the two legs united at top by a bow or spring so as to tend to move apart, the distance between the legs being adjusted by means of a screw and nut. For larger varieties see BOW-COMPASS.—Triangular compasses. See TRIANGULAR.—Proportional compasses. See PROPORTIONAL.

Compass (kum-pas'), v. t. 1 To stretch round; to extend so as to embrace the whole, to inclose, encircle, environ, surround, as, to compass with the arms. 'Compass'd by the inviolate sea.' Tennyson.

Now all the blessings
Of a glad father compass thee about. Shak.

With favour will thou compass him as with a shield. Ps. vi. 12.

2 To go or walk about or round.

The seventh day ye shall compass the city seven times. Josh. vi. 3.

3 To obtain; to attain to; to procure; to bring within one's power; to accomplish.

If I can check my crying love, I will.
If not, to compass her I'll use my skill. Shak.

How can you hope to compass your desires? Dr. Ham.

4 To purpose; to intend; to imagine; to plot; to contrive. [Obsolete except as a legal term.]

Compassing and imagining the death of the king are synonymous terms, compass signifying the purpose or design of the mind or will, and not, as in common speech, the carrying such design to effect. Blackstone.

5 To bend in the form of a circle or curve; to make circular or curved, as, to compass timber for a ship. 'To be compassed like a good bilbo in the circumference of a pack.' Shak. [Obsolete except in carpentry.]

ITS.] The largest known nat. order of plants, containing over 12,000 described species of herbs or shrubs distributed all over the world. The flowers (generally called forets) are numerous (with few exceptions) and sessile, forming a close head on the dilated top of the receptacle, and surrounded by an involucre of whorled bracts. The flowers are monopetalous, and the order is divided into three natural groups from the form of the corolla: (1) Tubulifloræ, in which it is tubular, with five, rarely four, teeth, (2) Labiifloræ, in which it is divided into two lips; and (3) Ligulifloræ, in which it is slit or ligulate. The stamens are inserted on the corolla, and their anthers are united into a tube (syngenesious). The style is two-cleft at the apex. The fruit is dry and seed-like. The head of numerous forets was called by the older botanists a compound flower, hence the name. The indigenous species in Britain are common weeds, like the daisy, dandelion, thistle, &c. Many plants of the order are cultivated in gardens, such as the aster, marigold, &c.

Compositæ (kom-pōz-ī-tē), s. [L. compositus, from compono, compositus, to compose, to compound.] 1. Made up of distinct parts, elements, or substances; compounded; as, a compositæ language.

Compound (kom'pound), a. [Originally a participle of O.E. compone, compouno, to compound. See the verb.] Composed of two or more elements, parts, or ingredients; not simple. The word is frequently used in bot. as, (a) a compound corymb, a corymb formed of several small corymba. (b) A compound flower, the flower of a plant of the order Composite (which see). (c) A compound fructification, a fructification consisting of several confluent florets. (d) A compound leaf, a leaf composed of several leaflets on one petiole, called a common petiole. (e) A compound raceme, a raceme composed of several racemes or small racemes. (f) A compound spike, a spike composed of several spikes or spikelets. (g) A compound stem, one that divides into branches. (h) A compound umbel, an umbel which has all its rays or peduncles bearing umbellules or small umbels at the top. — Compound is also a common term in arith. and math. — Compound fraction. See FRACTION. — Compound number, is that which may be divided by some other number besides unity without a remainder, as 18, which may be divided by 2, 6, and 9. — Compound proportion. See under PROPORTION. — Compound quantities, (a) In alg. such quantities as are joined by the signs + and -, plus and minus, and expressed by more letters than one or by the same letters unequally repeated. Thus $a + b - c$ and $b^2 - b$ are compound quantities. (b) In arith. quantities which consist of more than one denomination, as five pounds, six shillings, and ninepence, or four miles, three furlongs, and ten yards; hence, the operations of adding, subtracting, multiplying and dividing such quantities are termed compound addition, compound subtraction, compound multiplication, and compound division. — Compound ratio, is that which the product of the antecedents of two or more ratios has to the product of their consequents. Thus 6 to 72 is in a ratio compounded of 2 to 6 and of 3 to 12, because $\frac{6}{72} = \frac{2}{6} \times \frac{3}{12}$. In like manner the ratio of ab to cd is in a ratio compounded of a to c and of b to d ; for $\frac{ab}{cd} = \frac{a}{c} \times \frac{b}{d}$. Hence, it follows, that in any continued proportion the ratio of the first term to the last is compounded of all the intermediate ratios. See RATIO. — Compound animals, animals, many of which by no means belong to the lowest types, in which individuals, distinct as regards many of the functions of life, are yet connected by some part of their frame so as to form a united whole. Such are the polyzoa and some of the ascidia. — Compound archway, in medieval arch, a series of arches of different sizes, inclosed in one of larger dimensions. — Compound fracture, in surg. see FRACTURE. — Compound householder, a householder who compounds with his landlord for his rates, that is, whose rates are included in his rent.

I shall designate these inhabitants of towns by a phrase by which they are best known, though I am not sure that it is one of exact legal precision; I shall term them compound householders. Gladstone.

— Compound interest. See INTEREST. — Compound larceny. See LARCENY. — Compound motion. See MOTION. — Compound time, in music, is when two or more measures are joined in one, as $\frac{3}{4}$ and $\frac{3}{4}$. — Compound word, in gram. a word composed of two or more words, as ink-stand, writing-desk, table-cloth. The term is not properly applied to derivatives formed by means of prefixes or suffixes not separately significant, as return, resentment.

Compound (kom'pound), n. Something produced by compounding two or more ingredients, parts, or elements.

Man is a compound of flesh and spirit. South.

No compound of this earthly ball Is like another, all in all. Tennyson.

Many words that are really compound have lost the appearance of compounds, and look like simple words. Prof. Rasi.

Compound (kom'pound'), v. t. [O.E. compone, compouno, with d added, as in expound, propound, sound, vulgar dound, &c., from L. compono, to put together, to compose — com, together, and pono, to set or put.] 1. Con- A Latin prefix, a form of the preposition cum, with; as, concourse; condition, constant, contend, connection. This preposition when used as a prefix assumes various forms through the influence of the initial letter of the word or stem to which it is affixed. Thus, before a labial, it becomes com; as, compress, combine; before a vowel or A it becomes co; as, coalesce, cohere; before I it becomes co; as, collect; before r it becomes cor. It adds the notion of connection, or intensifies the meaning.

Con (kon). (Abbrev. from L. contra, against.) In the phrase pro and con, for and against, con denotes the contrary or negative side of a question. When used as a noun it denotes a person who is in the negative; or more commonly a statement, argument, point, or consideration, in opposition to or militating against what has been proposed; as, to take up the pros and cons of an argument.

Of many knotty points they spoke,
And pro and con by turns they took. Prior.

Con (kon), v.t. pret. & pp. conned; ppr. conning. (In first sense from A. Sax. cunnian, to know, to be able; in second from A. Sax. cunnian, to try, to examine, from the same verb. See CAN, KNOW.) 1.† To know.

Concentrator (kon-sen-trá-tér), n. One who or that which concentrates; specifically, an apparatus for the separation of dry, comminuted ore, according to the gravity of its particles, by exposing a falling sheet of ore dust to intermittent puffs of air. E. H. Knight.

Concentre (kon-sen'tér), v.t. pret. & pp. concentred; ppr. concentring. [Fr. concentrer—L. con, together, and centrum, a centre.] To converge to or meet in a common centre; to combine or be united in one object. 'God, in whom all perfections concentre.' Bp. Beveridge.

All these are like so many lines drawn from several objects, that in some way relate to him, and concentre in him. Sir M. Hale.

Concentre (kon-sen'tér), v.t. To draw or direct to a common centre; to bring together; to concentrate. 'In the concentring all their precious beams.' Milton. 'The wretch concentred all in self.' Sir W. Scott.

By no other intellectual application is the soul thus reflected on itself, and its faculties concentred in such independent, vigorous, unwonted, and continuous energy. Sir W. Hamilton.

Concentric (kon-sen'trik), a. [L. concentricus—con, and centrum, centre.] Having a common centre; as, concentric circles, ellipses, spheres, &c.; the concentric coats of onions, or bulbs with many layers; the concentric orbits of the planets. 'Concentric circles upon the surface of the water.' Newton.

Those, like so many spheres, but one heaven make. For they are all concentric unto thee. Donne.

Concentric (kon-sen'trik-al), a. Same as Concentric. Boyle, Aristotle.
Concentrically (kon-sen'trik-al-ly), adv. In a concentric manner, in a common centre.

All the torrents which descend from the southern side of the Alps, and from the northern slope of the Apennines, meet concentrically in the rocks or mountain by which the two ridges incline. Stoddard.

Concentricate (kon-sen'trik-it), v. t. To concentrate. Latham.
Concentricity (kon-sen'trik-i-ti), n. State of being concentric.

Concentric (kon-sen'trik-al), a. [From concentric.] Harmonious, accordant. 'This consummate or concentric song of the ninth sphere.' T. Warton. [Rare.]

Concept (kon-sept), n. The subject of a conception, the object conceived by the mind, a notion.

[Kant and his followers] say they are of three kinds:—Pure concepts, which borrow nothing from experience, as the notions of cause, time, and space; a. Important concepts, which are altogether derived from experience, as the notion of colour or pleasure; b. Mixed concepts, composed of elements furnished partly by experience and partly by the pure understanding. Flaming.

Conceptacle (kon-sept'ak-l), n. [L. conceptaculum, from conceptus.] See CONCEPT.

1. That in which anything is contained, a vessel, a receiver or receptacle. Woodward.
 2. In bot. the thickened apical part of some algae, in which spores and atheridia are both contained. Applied also to a similar organ in the fungi.

Conceptibility (kon-sept'i-bil-i-ti), n. The quality of being conceivable. Cudworth.

Conceptible (kon-sept'i-bil), a. [See CONCEPTIBLE.] Capable of being conceived; conceivable; intelligible. 'Auribus eadē conceptibiles by us.' Sir H. Hale.

Conception (kon-sep'shon), n. [L. conceptio, from conceptus.] See CONCEPT. 1. The act of conceiving, the first formation of the embryo of an animal.

I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception. Gen. iii. 16.

Fig.

Joy had the like conception in our eyes. Shak.

2. The act of conceiving in the mind, the power of conceiving in the mind; that which is conceived in the mind, as, (a) a product of the imaginative or inventive faculty. 'The conceptions of its poets, the creations of its sculptors.' Dr. Cuvier. (b) In phisic. (1) that mental act or combination of acts by which an absent object of perception is brought before the mind by the imagination. In this sense we form a conception of a book, when we imagine a book, although the book imagined must have a definite size, form, and colour, none of which is included in the meaning of the word 'book.'

Under the article of conception, I shall confine myself to that faculty whose province it is to enable us to form a notion of past sensations, or of the objects of sense that we have formerly perceived. Sartori.

Mr. Stewart has even bestowed on the reproductive imagination the term conception,—happily, we do not think, as both in grammatical propriety, and by the older and correcter usage of philosophers, this term is rather the product of this operation.—Conception is convertible with general notion or more correctly, notion, simply, and in this sense is admirably rendered by the figura (what is grasped up) of the Cartesians. Sir M. H. Hall.

(3) That which constitutes the meaning of a word, and which is not capable of being presented to the mind by a single act of imagination, a notion, also the mental operation by which such notions or conceptions are formed. In this sense we form the conception of a book when we consider the attributes of a book together, and recognize them as existing in a number of individual instances which form a class by themselves in virtue of this fact.

The first and most important of the three concepts first round which the speculation carried on by Kant and Fichte clusters, is what we have called the metaphysical conception—the conception of immaterial substance. Substance, the predominant basis of all phenomena, is the deepest thought of metaphysical speculation. Schopenhauer.

See also the extract from Sir W. Hamilton above. (c) Thought, notion, or idea in the loose sense, as, you have no conception how clever he is.

But a religion whose object was the truth was at this time so unknown a thing that a pagan magistrate could have no conception of it but as a new sect of philosophy. Marbon.

2. A conceit, a fanciful thought. 'Full of conceptions, points of epigram, and withal—Dryden.—Imaginative conception. See IMAGINATION.—STY Notion, idea, image, thought, concept, apprehension, sentiment, view.

Conceptional (kon-sep'shon-al), a. Pertaining to or having the nature of a conception or notion.

There is movement in the whole vocabulary of language, from the designation of what is common, grosser, more material, to the designation of what is finer, more abstract and conceptional, more formal. H. Adams.

Conceptionalist (kon-sep'shon-al-ist), n. A conceptionalist.

Conceptionist (kon-sep'shon-ist), a. Apt to conceive, fruitful. 'The fertile and conceptionist woman.' Shak.

Conceptive (kon-sep'tiv), a. Capable of conceiving, (a) physically.

The uterine parts may be reduced into a conceptive condition. Sir T. Brown.

(b) Mentally

The alleged inconceivableness of a minimum or a limit is not due to an arrest of the conceptive power, but a holding of it. H. Spencer.

Conceptual (kon-sep'tsh-al), a. Pertaining to conception, mental or physical.

Every conceptual act is so immediately followed as to seem accompanied by a concomitant idea. H. Spencer.

Conceptualism (kon-sep'tsh-al-izm), n. In metaph. a doctrine in some sense intermediate between realism and nominalism. See CONCEPTUALIST.

Conceptualist (kon-sep'tsh-al-ist), n. One who holds the doctrine that the mind has the power of assigning an independent existence to general conceptions.

The conceptualist seeks to establish an existence which may be called logical or psychological, that is, independent of single objects, but dependent upon the mind of the thinking subject, in which they are as notions or conceptions. Flaming.

Conceptualistic (kon-sep'tsh-al-ist-ik), a. Pertaining to conceptualism or conceptualism.

Concern (kon-sern), v. t. [L. concernere, to mix, mingle together, as in a clove—con, together, and cernere, to sift; con with cernere, to separate.] 1. To relate or belong to.

Pruning the kingdom of God, and teaching these things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ. Acts xviii. 25.

2. To affect the interest of, to be of importance to.

Our wars with France have affected us in our most tender interests, and concerned us more than that with any other state. Adams.

3. With the reflexive pronoun, to take or have an interest in, to occupy or busy one's self with, as, a good prince concerns himself in the happiness of his subjects.

Being a la prison I ought not to have concerned myself with speculations which belong to the profession. Flaming.

4. To disturb, to make uneasy; to engage concerns to generally in pp., as, to be deeply concerned about the safety of a friend.

In one concerning engine I shot a sparrow, without forcing any air in, and in an hour or two began to pass, and he concerned, and in less than an hour and a half he was sick. Darwin.

Concern (kon-sern), n. 1. That which relates or belongs to one, business, affair. 'Exposing the private concerns of families.' Adams.—2. Interest, matter of importance, that which affects one's welfare or happiness.

Thy all mankind's concern that he should live. Dryden.

3. Compassionate or affectionate regard, solicitude, anxiety, agitation or uneasiness of mind, disturbed state of feeling.

Why all this concern for the poor? We want them not. Swift.

O March, let me hope thy kind concern. And gentle wishes, follow me to battle. Adams.

4. An establishment or firm for the transaction of business, a manufacturing or commercial establishment. 'The stoppage of one or two more banking concerns.' Sir Hen.

5. Loosely applied to almost any object whatever, especially one that is large and constructed of different pieces. 'The concern coach—a great lumbering, square, concern.' Dickens [Colloq.]—Care, solicitude, Concern, Anxiety. See under CARE.

Concerning (kon-sern-ing), n. Concern; business, import. Shak.

Concerned (kon-sern-d), p. and a. Having concern, interested, engaged, anxious.

Concernedly (kon-sern-ed-ly), adv. In a concerned manner, with anxiety or solicitude, with interest. Cleveland.

Concernedness (kon-sern-ed-ness), n. State of being concerned. 'Earnestness and concernedness.' Ally. Sharp.

Concerning (kon-sern-ing), prep. Pertaining to, regarding, with relation to. [This word, originally a participle, is now fully established as a preposition, being freely used without being made to agree with any other word.]

I have accepted these concerning this thing also, that I will not overthrow this city for the which these last speak. Gen. xix. 11.

Concerning (kon-sern-ing), a. Important. 'So great and so concerning a truth.' South.

Concerning (kon-sern-ing), n. A matter of importance, concern, business.

We shall write to you concerning shall importance. Shak.

Concernment (kon-sern'ment), n. 1. A thing in which one is concerned or interested, concern, affair, business, interest.

Propositions which extend only to the present life are small, compared with those that have influence upon our everlasting concernments. Watts.

The great concernment of men is with death. Luther.

2. State of concerning or bearing upon the interest or happiness of one, importance; moment.

He justly fears a peace would prove Of concernment to his haughty love. Dryden.

Experimental truths are matters of great concernment to mankind. Boyle.

3. State of being concerned or occupied, interference; participation.

He married a daughter to the earl without any other approbation of her father or concernment in it, than suffering him and her to come into his presence. Cleveland.

4. State of being concerned or anxious, concern; solicitude, anxiety.

Their ambition is manifest in their concernment. Dryden.

Concern (kon-sern), v. t. [Fr. concerner, from li, concernere, to concern, to contrive, apparently from li, con, together, and cernere, to contend, but rather misapplied from li, concernere, to join together, to unite, to employ.] 1. To contrive and settle by mutual communication of opinions or propositions; to settle or adjust, as a plan of action to be pursued, by conference or agreement of two or more parties, as, to concern a scheme.

The two regents, having concerned their plan, parted company. Boyle.

2. To plan; to devise.

A commander had more trouble to concern his distance before the people than to plan the operations of a campaign. Boyle.

3. [From the noun concern.] To sing in concert. [Rare.]

And we, with Nature's heart in tune, Concerted harmonies. Milford.

Concert (kon-sert), v. i. To act in concert; with with. [Rare.]

The ministers of Denmark were appointed to concert with Talbot. Sir. Bernal.

Concert (kon-sert), n. [From above verb, but in 3 and following meanings the L. concertus, a singing together, seems to have had an influence.] 1. Agreement of two or more in a design or plan; union formed by mutual communication of opinions and views; accordance in a scheme; harmony; as, the emperor and the pope acted in concert.

All these discontents have arisen from the want of a due communication and concert. Swift.

2. The music of a company of players or singers, or of both united, a public or private musical entertainment, at which a number of vocalists or instrumentalists, or both, perform singly or combined.—3. Any public musical entertainment.—4. In music, concord, harmony.

Compositions, called concertos or act music, were written and played in concert, and not in unison as formerly. Stainer & Barrett.

—Concert piece. See PITCH.

Concertante (kon-sertan'te), n. [It ppr. of concertare, to form a concert.] A piece of music composed for several principal instruments or voices, with an accompaniment for the band, differing from a concerto, which has but one principal instrument. Concertation (kon-sertan'shon), n. [L. con- certatio, a contending together. See CONCERT, v.1. Strife; contention.

After the concertation when they could not agree, the king coming between them, called away the bishops from the monks. Faxe.

Concertative† (kon-sér'ta-tiv), a. Contentious; quarrelsome. Bailey.

Concerted (kon-sért'ed), p. and a. Mutually contrived or planned; as a concerted scheme. — Concerted piece, in music, a composition in parts for several voices or instruments, as a trio, a quartet, &c.

Concertina (kon-sér-tē'na), n. [From concert.] A musical instrument invented by Professor Wheatstone, the principle of which is similar to that of the accordion. It is composed of a bellows, with two faces or ends, generally polygonal in shape, on which are placed the various stops or studs, by the action of which air is admitted to the free metallic reeds which produce the sounds. In the English concertina the finger-stops are in four rows, the two inner rows being confined to the notes of the natural scale, and the two outer to the sharps and flats. The compass of the instrument is three octaves and three notes, and the sounds in the scale are double, that is, in pressing a stud the same note is produced when the bellows is drawn out as when it is pushed in. The German concertina is an inferior instrument, having a less extensive compass, and being capable of producing music only in a very limited number of keys, while the English concertina can be played in any key.

Concertment (kon-sért'mēt), n. The act of concerting. R. Pollok. [Rare.]

Concerto (kon-chár'tō), n. [It.] A piece of music for a concert; originally, a composition in which many performers played in unison, but in which one or two instruments took the lead; but now a species of composition, usually in a symphonic form, written for one principal instrument, with accompaniments for a full orchestra.

Concession (kon-sé'shon), n. [L. concessio, from concedo. See CONCEDE.] 1. The act of conceding, granting, or yielding; usually implying a demand, claim, or request from the party to whom it is made. 'Not permitted by the concession of God.' Jer. Taylor.

The concession of these charters was in a parliamentary way. Sir M. Hale.

By some mutual concessions the business was adjusted. Hallam.

Specifically, in rhet. the yielding, granting, or allowing to the opposite party some point or fact that may bear dispute, with a view to obtain something which cannot be denied, or to show that even admitting the point conceded, the cause is not with the adverse party, but can be maintained by the advocate on other grounds. — 2. The thing yielded; a grant.

A gift of more worth, in a temporal view, was the grant to the king of the cruzada, the excusada, and other concessions of ecclesiastical revenue. Prescott.

[This sense has been specially applied to grants of land, privileges, or immunities to certain individuals or companies to enable or empower them to do certain things, as to construct railways, canals, &c.]

A Frenchman has obtained the concession (the privilege of making the Suez Canal), and it may be executed by French engineers and French workmen. Edin. Rev.

Concessionary† (kon-sé'shon-ar-i), a. Yielding by indulgence or allowance. Bailey.

Conchoidal (kong-koi'dal), a. In mineral. having convex elevations and concave depressions like shells; applied principally to a surface produced by breaking, certain minerals being said to have a conchoidal fracture.

Conchological (kong-kō-loj'ik-al), a. Pertaining to conchology. 'The conchological labours of Linnaeus and his followers.' Ency. Brit.

Conchologist (kong-kol'o-jist), n. 1. One versed in conchology. — 2. The name given to the carrier shells (genus Phorus), from their often attaching shells to the margins of their whorls as they grow.

Conchology (kong-kol'o-jī), n. [Gr. kongchē, a shell, and logos, discourse.] The science of shells; that department of zoology which treats of the nature, formation, and classification of the shells with which the bodies of many molluscs are protected; or the word may be used also to include a knowledge of the animals themselves, in which case it is equivalent to malacology. In systems of conchology shells are usually divided into three orders, Univalves, Bivalves, and Multivalves, according to the number of plates of which they are composed.

Conchometer (kong-kom'et-ér), n. [Gr. kongchē, a shell, and metron, a measure.] An instrument for measuring molluscous shells and the angle of their spire.

Concho-spiral (kong-kō-spi-ral), n. A variety of spiral curve existing in certain shells. Agassiz.

Conchylaceous, Conchylaceous (kong-ki-lá'shus, kong-ki-lí'a'shus), a. [L. conchylium, from Gr. kongchylion, dim. of kongchē, a shell.] Pertaining to shells; resembling a shell; as, conchylaceous impressions.

Conchylologist, Conchylology (kong-ki-lí'o-lo-jist, kong-ki-lí'o-lo-jī), [From L.

conchylium. See above.] Forms sometimes formerly used as synonyms of Conchologist and Conchology.

Conchyliometry (kong-ki-lí'om'et-ri), n. [L. conchylium (see above), and Gr. metron, measure.] The art or science of measuring shells or their curves.

Conchylious (kong-ki-lí-us), a. [L. conchylium. See above.] Belonging or pertaining to the shelled mollusca.

Conciator (kon-shi-á-tér), n. [L. conciare, conciatum, to reft, from comptus, pp. of comere, to dress, adorn.] In glass-making, the person who weighs and proportions the materials to be made into glass.

Concerge (kon-syá'zh), n. [Fr.] One who attends at the entrance to an edifice, public or private; a door-keeper to a hotel, house, prison, &c.; a janitor, male or female; a porter.

Conciliab† (kon-sil'i-a-bl), n. [L. conciliabulum, dim. of concilium, a council.] A small assembly; a conventicle.

Some have sought the truth in conventicles and conciliabules of heretics and sectaries. Bacon.

Concilliable (kon-sil'i-a-bl), a. Capable of being reconciled or conciliated.

Nor doth he put away adulterously who complains of causes rooted in immutable nature, utter unfiness, utter discomformity, not conciliabile, because not to be amended without a miracle. Milton.

Conciliabule (kon-sil'i-a-bül), n. [See CONCILIABLE, n.] Eccles. a small assembly; an obscure council. Milman. [Rare.]

Conciliar (kon-sil'i-ér), a. [From L. concilium, a council.] Pertaining or relating to a council. 'Conciliar debates.' Baker.

Conciliary (kon-sil'i-a-ri), a. Same as Conciliar. Jer. Taylor.

Conciliate (kon-sil'i-át), v. t. pret. & pp. conciliated, ppr. conciliating. [L. concilio, conciliatum, to bring together, unite, as in thought or feeling, from concilium, plan, purpose, council. See COUNCIL.] 1. To reconcile or bring to a state of friendship; to make friendly or satisfied; to pacify; to soothe.

The rapacity of his father's administration had excited such universal discontent, that it was found expedient to conciliate the nation. Hallam.

2. To lead or draw to by moral influence or power; to win, gain, or engage, by something adapted to secure regard or favour.

Christ's other miracles ought to have conciliated belief to his doctrine from the Jews. Cudworth.

It were to be supposed . . . that these evangelists and apostolical men and founders of corrupted Christianity in many places, had the power of working miracles, to introduce themselves to strangers, and to conciliate their regard and respect. Forten.

3. To gain or secure by a secret though not moral influence. 'A philtre, or plants that conciliate affection.' Sir T. Browne. [Rare.]

4. To reconcile, harmonize, or show to be compatible. — Syn. To win, gain, engage, propitiate, reconcile, appease.

Conciliating (kon-sil'i-át-ing), a. Winning; pacifying; having the quality of gaining favour; as, a conciliating address.

Conciliation (kon-sil'i-á'shon), n. 1. The act of reconciling persons at variance; the act of making friends; as, he applied himself to the conciliation of the rival lords.

The house has gone farther; it has declared conciliation admissible previous to any submission on the part of America. Burke.

2. The act of winning or gaining; as, the conciliation of favour, esteem, affection, and the like. — 3. The act of reconciling, or rendering or showing to be compatible; the act of harmonizing or showing to be in harmony.

St. Austin repeatedly declares the conciliation of the foreknowledge, predestination, and free grace of God with the free will of man, to be a most difficult question, intelligible only to few. Sir W. Hamilton.

Conciliative (kon-sil'i-á-tiv), a. Reconciling; pacific; conciliatory. Coleridge.

Conciliator (kon-sil'i-á-tér), n. One who conciliates or reconciles. 'The conciliator of Christendom.' Bp. Hackett.

Conciliatory (kon-sil'i-a-tor-i), a. Tending to conciliate or reconcile; tending to make peace between persons at variance; pacific; as, the general made conciliatory propositions to the insurgents; the legislature adopted conciliatory measures. 'The amiable, conciliatory virtues of lenity, moderation, and tenderness to the privileges of those who depend on this kingdom.' Burke.

Syn. Pacific, winning, engaging.

Concinnate† (kon-sin'at), v. t. [L. concinnare, concinnatum. See CONCINNY.] To place fitly or becomingly together; to make neat; to clear; to purify. 'A recelt to trim and concinnate wine.' Holland.

Conclonator† (kon'shi-ó-ná'tér), n. 1. A preacher. Cockeram. 2. A common councilman; a freeman. Wharton.

Concise (kon-ál's), a. [L. concisus, cut off, brief, from concido—con, and cado, to cut.] Comprehending much in few words; brief and comprehensive; employing as few words as possible; as, in Genesis we have a concise account of the creation.

The concise style, which expresseth not enough, but leaves somewhat to be understood. B. Jonson. Where the author is . . . too brief and concise, amplify a little.

—Concise, Succinct, Condensed. Concise refers to style in speaking or writing, and signifies expressing much in a few words. Succinct is more frequently applied to the subject-matter. Both terms signify brevity and comprehensiveness combined, but we speak of a concise style or phrase; a succinct narrative or account. Condensed relates more to the mode of treatment by which a matter is brought or compressed into a smaller space than it might have occupied.—SYN. Brief, short, compendious, comprehensive, summary, succinct, laconic. Concisely (kon-ál'sl'), adv. In a concise manner; briefly; in few words.

But to return to this digression, though it was almost necessary, all the rules of painting are methodically, concisely, and yet clearly delivered in this present treatise which I have translated. Dryden.

Conciseness (kon-ál's-nez), n. The quality of being concise; brevity in speaking or writing. 'The conciseness of Demosthenes the Greek orator.' Dryden.

Concision (kon-ál'shon), n. [L. L. concisio, from concisum, concido, to cut off. See CONCISE.] 1. A division; a schism; a faction; a sect.

Those of the concision who made it (that is, the concision) would do well to consider whether that which our Saviour assures us will destroy a kingdom be the likeliest way to settle and support a church. South.

Hence—2. The word used by the translators of the authorized version of the Bible to render the Greek kataíome, the word used by St. Paul in Phil. iii. 2, apparently in contempt, instead of períome, for circumcison.

Beware of dogs; beware of evil-workers; beware of the concision. Phil. iii. 2.

Conciseness. 'His wonted vigour and concision.' Brougham. [Rare.]

No doubt, if I had wish'd to pay my court To critics, or to hail the setting sun Of tyranny of all kinds, my concision Were more. Byron.

Concittation† (kon-ál-tá'shon), n. [L. concitatio, from concito, to stir or disturb—prefix con, intens., and cito, to stir.] The act of stirring up, exciting, or putting in motion. 'The concitation of humours.' Sir T. Browne.

Concitate† (kon-ál't), v. t. pret. & pp. concited; ppr. conciting. [L. concito.] To excite. Cotgrave.

Concittizen (kon-sit'i-zen), n. A fellow-citizen. Knox. [Rare.]

Conclamation (kon-kla-má'shon), n. [L. conclamatio, from conclamo—prefix con, together, and clamo, to cry out. See CLAIM.] An outcry or shout of many together; a clamorous outcry. May.

Conclave (kon-klav), n. [L. conclave, a room locked by a key, a cabinet, a closet—con, together, and clavis, a key.] 1. A private apartment, particularly the place in which the cardinals of the Roman Catholic Church meet in privacy for the election of a pope.—

2. The assembly or meeting of the cardinals shut up for the election of a pope; hence, the body of cardinals.

I bid him welcome
And thank the holy conclave for their loves. Shak.

It was said of a cardinal, by reason of his apparent likelihood to step into St. Peter's chair, that in two conclaves he went in pope and came out again cardinal. South.

3. A private meeting; a close assembly. 'In close recess and secret conclave sat.' Milton.

The verdicts, pronounced by this conclave (Johnson's club) on new books, were speedily known over all London. Macaulay.

Conclavist (kon-klav-íst), n. An attendant whom a cardinal is allowed to take with him into the conclave for the choice of a pope.

Conclimate (kon-kli'mát), v. t. [Prefix con, and climate.] To acclimatize. Quart. Rev. [Rare.]

Conclude (kon-kld'), v. t. pret. & pp. concluded; ppr. concluding. [L. concludo—prefix con, together, and claudo, to shut, whence also clause.] 1. To shut up; to inclose. [Obsolete or poetical.]

The very person of Christ . . . was only, touching bodily substance, concluded in the grave. Hooker.

I dreamt
Of some vast charm concluded in a star
To make fake nothing. Tennyson.

2. To include; to comprehend.

For God hath concluded them all in unbelief, that he might have mercy upon all. Rom. xi. 32.
The Scripture hath concluded all under sin. Gal. iii. 22.

3. To infer or arrive at by reasoning; to deduce, as from premises; to infer to be: often governing a clause.

No man can conclude God's love or hatred to any person, by anything that befalls him. Tillotson.
Reprove my allegation, if you can;
Or else conclude my words effectual. Shak.

4. To make a final judgment or determination concerning; to judge.

But no frail man, however great or high,
Can be concluded brief before he die. Addison.

5. To end; to finish.

I will conclude this part with the speech of a councillor of state. Bacon.

6. To settle or arrange finally. 'To conclude a peace.' Shak.

You sent a large commission to conclude a league between his highness and Ferrara. Shak.

7. To stop or restrain, or as in law to stop from further argument or proceedings; to oblige or bind, as by authority, or by one's own argument or concession; generally in the passive; as, the defendant is concluded by his own plea.

If they will appeal to revelation for their creation, they must be concluded by it. Sir M. Hale.

I do not consider the decision of that motion, upon affidavits, to amount to a res judicata, which ought to conclude the present inquiry. Kent.

SYN. To infer, decide, determine, close, finish, terminate, end.

Conclude (kon-kld'), v. i. 1. To perform the last act of ratiocination; to gather up the consequences or consequence; to infer; to determine.

For why should we the busy soul believe,
When boldly she concludes of that and this. Sir J. Davies.

2. To settle opinion; to form a final judgment.

Where gentry, title, wisdom,
Cannot conclude but by the yea and no
Of general ignorance. Shak.

3. To come to a decision; to resolve; to determine; generally followed by an infinitive or a clause.

They did conclude to bear dead Lucrece thence. Shak.

4. To end.

A train of lies,
That, made in lust, conclude in perjuries. Dryden.

Concludence† Conclendency† (kon-kld'-enz, kon-kld'en-s), n. Inference; logical deduction from premises; consequence. 'A necessary and infallible conclendency in these evidences of fact.' Sir M. Hale.

Concludent† (kon-kld'ent), a. Bringing to a close; decisive. 'Arguments highly consequential and concludent to my purpose.' Sir M. Hale.

Concluder (kon-kld'er), n. One who concludes. 'Not forward concluders in these times.' Mountagu.

Concluding (kon-kld'ing), a. Final; ending; closing; as, the concluding sentence of an essay.

Concludingly† (kon-kld'ing-ly), adv. Conclusively; with incontrovertible evidence.

Examine whether the opinion . . . be concludingly demonstrated or not. Sir K. Digby.

Concludible (kon-kld'z-bl), a. Capable of being concluded or inferred; determinable.

'Tis certainly concludible . . . that they will voluntarily do this. Hammond.

Conclusion (kon-kld'zhon), n. [L. conclusio.] 1. The end, close, or termination; the last part; as, the conclusion of an address; often in the phrase in conclusion = finally, lastly, to conclude, and formerly also = in short.—2. Final result.

Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter. Fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole duty of man. Ecc. xii. 13.

3. Determination; final decision; as, after long debate the House of Commons came to this conclusion.

And the conclusion is she shall be thine;
In practice let us put it presently. Shak.

4. Consequence; inference; deduction from propositions, facts, experience, or reasoning; specifically, in logic, the inference of a syllogism as drawn from the premises.

He granted him both the major and the minor, but denied the conclusion. Addison.

5. Something concluded or accomplished; something actually done.

Iago. Nay, this was but his dream.
Oth. But this denoted a foregone conclusion. Shak.

6. An experiment. [Obsolete except in the phrase to try conclusions.]

We practise all conclusions of grafting and inoculating. Bacon.

Her physician tells me
She hath pursued conclusions infinite
Of easy ways to die. Shak.

And like the famous ape,
To try conclusions in the basket creep,
And break your neck down. Shak.

7. In law, (a) the charging of one's self with some duty, or the like; an estoppel. (b) The end of a pleading or conveyance.—Conclusion to the country, the conclusion of a pleading by which a party 'puts himself upon his country,' that is, appeals to the verdict of a jury. See under COUNTRY.

Conclunational† (kon-kld'zhon-ál), a. Concluding. Bp. Hooper.

Conclusive (kon-kld'siv), a. 1. Decisive; giving a final determination; putting an end to debate or argument; leading to a conclusion or determination.

The agreeing votes of both houses were not, by any law or reason, conclusive to my judgment. Eskon Basilike.

If the world be finite in dimensions it is movable by the power of God; and therefore my argument drawn from that movableness is conclusive. Clarke.

2. Specifically, bringing out or leading to a regular logical conclusion; conforming to the rules of the syllogism.

Men . . . not knowing the true forms of syllogisms, cannot know whether they are made in right and conclusive modes and figures.

—Final, Conclusive, Ultimate. See under FINAL—SYN. Final, convincing, satisfactory.

Conclusively (kon-kld'siv-ly), adv. In a conclusive manner; decisively; with final determination; as, the point of law is conclusively settled.

The question has been most ably and conclusively cleared up in one of the reports of the select committee. Burke.

Conclusiveness (kon-kld'siv-nez), n. The quality of being conclusive or decisive; the power of determining the opinion or of settling a question; as, the conclusiveness of evidence or of an argument. 'The conclusiveness of the proof.' J. S. Mill.

Concluseory (kon-kld'sor-i), a. Conclusive. [Rare.]

Conclusum (kon-kld'sum), n. [Neut. of pp. of concludo, concludum. See CONCLUDE.] In diplomacy, see extract.

A conclusum is a résumé of the demands presented by a government. It may be discussed, and therein lies its difference from an ultimatum, which must be accepted or rejected as it stands. Blackwood's Mag.

Concoagulate (kon-kó-ag'ú-lát), v. t. and i. [Prefix con, and coagulate.] To curdle or congeal together; to form one homogeneous mass.

For some solutions require more, others less, spirit of wine to concoagulate adequately with them. Boyle.

Concoagulation (kon-kó-ag'ú-lá'shon), n. A coagulating together, as different substances or bodies in one homogeneous mass; crystallization of different salts in the same menstruum. 'A concoctation of the corpules of a dissolved metal with those of the menstruum.' Boyle.

Concoct (kon-kokt'), v. t. [L. concoquo, concoctum—coq, and coquo, to cook. See COOK.] 1. To digest by the stomach so as to turn food to chyle or nutriment.

The vital functions are performed by general and constant laws; the food is concocted, the heart beats, the blood circulates, the lungs play. Dr. G. Chagne.

2. To purify or sublime; to refine by separating the gross or extraneous matter. 'High concocted venom.' Thomson.—3. To ripen; to develop.

The root which still continueth in the earth is still concocted by the earth. Bacon.

4. Fig. to form and prepare in the mind; to devise; to plan; to plot; as, to concoct a scheme or a conspiracy.—5. To bring to maturity; to accomplish; to achieve.

He was a man unable to concoct any great fortune.

Sir J. Hayward.

Concocter (kon-kokt'ér), n. One who concocts. 'This private concocter of malcontent.' Milton.

Concoction (kon-kok'shon), n. [L. concoctio. See CONCOCT.] 1. Digestion or preparation of food in the stomach.

The meats and drinks received into the stomach are altered by concoction and digestion. Sir T. Elyot.

2. The process by which morbid matter was formerly supposed to be separated from the blood or humours, or otherwise changed and prepared to be thrown off; maturation. 3. A ripening; the advance of anything toward perfection.

The constant notion of concoction is, that it should signify the degree of alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction. Bacon.

4. The act of devising or preparing in the mind; as, the concoction of a scheme or plot.

This was an error in the first concoction, and therefore never to be mended in the second or third. Dryden.

Concoctive (kon-kokt'iv), a. 1. Digestive; having the power of digesting.

Hence the concoctive powers, with various art, Subdue the cruder aliments to chyle. Armstrong.

2. Ripening or tending to ripen or mature. Thomson.

Concolor† (kon-kul'ér), a. [L. concolor.] Of one colour; without variety. 'Concolor animals.' Sir T. Browne. [Rare.]

Concomitance, Concomitancy (kon-kom'-i-tans, kon-kom'-i-tan-si), n. 1. The state of being concomitant; a being together or in connection with another thing.

The secondary action subethet not alone, but in concomitancy with the other. Sir T. Browne.

2. A doctrine to the effect that the body and blood of Christ are both received by communicating in one species only. Rev. Orby Shipley.

And therefore the dream of the Church of Rome that he that receives the body receives also the blood, because by concomitance the blood is received in the body, is neither true nor pertinent to this question. Jer. Taylor.

Concomitaneous (kon-kom-i-tá'né-us), a. Accompanying. 'Concomitaneous with most of other vices.' Feltham.

Concomitant (kon-kom-i-tant), a. [From L. com, together, and comitor, to accompany, from comes, a companion. See COUNT, a nobleman.] Accompanying; conjoined with; concurrent; attending: may be followed by with or to.

It has pleased our wise Creator to annex to several objects a concomitant pleasure. Locke.

As the beauty of the body accompanies the health of it, so certainly is decency concomitant to virtue. Hughes (quoted by Crabbe).

Concomitant (kon-kom-i-tant), n. A thing that accompanies another; an accompaniment; an accessory.

The other concomitant of ingratitude is hardness of heart. South.

Reproach is a concomitant to greatness. Addison.

Formerly it might be applied to persons.

He made him the chief concomitant of his heir-apparent and only son. Reliquie Wettiana.

Concomitantly (kon-kom-i-tant-li), adv. So as to be concomitant; in company; untidely. 'A few curious particulars . . . which concomitantly illustrate the history of the arts.' H. Walpole.

This simple bloody speculation of the lungs is differentiated from that which concomitates a pleurisy. Harvey.

Concomitation (kon-kom'-i-tá'shon), n. Same as Concomitance. 2. 'Transubstantiation and concomitation.' Foss.

Concord (kon'kord), n. [Fr. concorde; L. concordia, from concorere—con, and cor, cordis, the heart. See ACCORD.] 1. Agreement between persons; union in opinions, sentiments, views, or interests; peace; harmony. What concord hath Christ with Belial? 2 Cor. vi. 15. Love quarrels off in pleasing concord end. Milton.

2. Agreement between things; suitableness; harmony.

If, nature's concord broke, Among the constellations, war were sprung. Milton.

3. In music, the pleasing combination of two or more sounds; the relation between two or more sounds, which are agreeable to the ear. The concord is the 8th (or octave), 6th, 3d, and 4th. Their ratios are: 2:1, 3:2, 4:3, 5:4. The first two are called perfect, because, as concord, not liable to any alteration by sharps or flats. The last two are called imperfect, because alterable. See CHORD. 'Concordes, discordes, notes, and cliffee, in tunes of unisonne.' Gascoigne. 'The true concord of well tuned sounds.' Shak.—4. A compact; an agreement by stipulation; treaty. 'The concord made between Henry and Roderick the Irish king.' Sir J. Davies.

After which concord made, the cardinal and the archbishop of York did many things without the consent of the king or the duke. Hall.

5. In law, an agreement between the parties in a fine, made by leave of the court, prior to the abolition of fines of land by the act 3 and 4 William IV. lxiv. This was an acknowledgment from the deforcants that the land in question was the right of the complainant.—6. In gram. agreement of words in construction, as adjectives with nouns in gender, number, and case; or verbs with nouns or pronouns in number and person.—Form of concord (eccles.), the title of a Lutheran document concerning disputed doctrines, in which sundry Protestant opinions were condemned, drawn up at Torgau, 1576.

Concord† (kon-kord'), v. i. To agree; to cooperate. Friends and associates ready to concord with them in any desperate measure. Clarendon.

Concordable (kon-kord'a-bl), a. Capable of according; agreeing; harmonious. Todd.

Concordably (kon-kord'a-bl), adv. With concord or agreement.

Concordance (kon-kord'ans), n. [Fr. concordance. See CONCORD.] 1. The state of being concordant; agreement; harmony. 'Where all the elements concordance have.' W. Browne. 'Contrasts and yet concordances. Carlyle.—2. In gram. concord. Ascham.

3. A book in which the principal words used in any work, as the Scriptures, Shakspeare, Milton, Tennyson, &c., are arranged alphabetically, and the book, chapter, and verse, or act, scene, line, or other subdivision in which each word occurs, are noted; designed to assist an inquirer in finding any passage by means of any leading word which he can recollect. The Latin concordances of St. Hieron's bible. Jer. Taylor.

His knowledge of the Bible was such that he might be called a living concordance. Macaulay.

Concordancy† (kon-kord'an-si), n. Agreement. W. Montague. [Rare.]

Concordant (kon-kord'ant), a. [From L. concordans, ppr. of concordare, to agree. See CONCORD.] Agreeing; agreeable; correspondent; harmonious. 'Concordant discords.' Mir. for Mags.

Were every one employed in points concordant to their natures, professions, and arts, commonwealths would rise up of themselves. Sir T. Browne.

Concordant (kon-kord'ant), n. That which is concordant or harmonious. Mountagu.

Concordantly (kon-kord'ant-li), adv. In a concordant manner. W. Montague.

Concordat (kon-kord'at), n. [Fr. from L. L. concordatum, mind, to agree. See CONCORD.] An agreement; compact; convention; but almost always in the special senses of (a) in canon law, a compact, covenant, or agreement concerning some beneficiary matter, as a resignation, permutation, promotion, and the like. (b) A formal agreement between the see of Rome and any secular government, for the settling of ecclesiastical relations. The most celebrated concordat was that agreed upon between Cardinal Gonsalvi, in the name of Pius VII., and the first consul Bonaparte in July, 1801. By it the head of the state had the nomination of bishops to the vacant sees; the clergy became subject in temporal matters to the civil power; all immunities, ecclesiastical courts, and jurisdictions were abolished in France, and even the regulations of the public worship and religious ceremonies and the pastoral addresses of the clergy, were placed under the control of the secular authorities. Most of these provisions remain in France at the present day. Since the middle of the eighteenth century concordats have generally been adverse to the power of the popes.

Concordate (kon-kord'át), n. Same as Concordat. Swift.

Concordist (kon-kord'ist), n. The compiler of a concordance. Worcester.

Concordly† (kon-kord-li), adv. Concordantly. Foss.

Concorporal† (kon-kor'po-rál), a. Of the same body. Bailey.

Concorporate (kon-kor'po-rát), v. t. pret. & pp. concorporated; ppr. concorporating. [L. concorporo—con, together, and corpus, a body.] To unite in one mass or body; to unite in any close union; to incorporate. 'To be incorporatèd in the same studies and exercises, in the same affections, employments, and course of life.' Holland. 'Concorporating things inconsistent.' Boyle.

We are all concorporated, as it were, and made copartners of the promise in Christ. A. A. Usher.

Concorporate (kon-kor'po-rát), v. i. To unite in one mass or body. 'To bring the stock and graft to (if I may so speak) concorporate.' Boyle.

Concorporate (kon-kor'po-rát), a. United in the same body. B. Jonson.

Concorporation (kon-kor'po-rá'shon), n. Union of things in one mass or body.

Concourse (kong'kôrs), n. [Fr. concours; L. concursum, from concurrere, to run together—con, and curro, to run.] 1. A moving, flowing, or running together; confluence.

The coalition of the good frame of the universe was not the product of chance or fortuitous concurrence of particles of matter. Sir M. Hale.

2. A meeting or coming together of people; an assembly; a throng; a crowd. 'Great concourses of people.' Fabyan. 'Concourses in arms, fierce faces threatening war.' Milton. 'The banquet and concourse of knights and kings.' Tennyson.

Amidst the concourse were to be seen the noble ladies of Milan in gay fantastic cars, shining in silk brocade, and with sumptuous caparisons for their horses. Prescott.

3. An assemblage of things; agglomeration; cluster. Under some concourse of shades whose branching arms, &c. Milton.—4. The place or point of meeting; the point of contact or junction of two or more bodies. [Rare.]

The drop will begin to move toward the concourse of the glasses. Newton.

5. Concurrence; aid; co-operation.

Why should he despair of success, since effects naturally follow their causes, and the divine Providence is wont to afford its concours to such proceedings. Barrow.

6. In Scots law, concurrence by a person having legal qualification to grant it. Thus to every libel in the Court of Justiciary the lord-advocate's concours or concurrence is necessary.—Concourse of actions, in Scots law, is where, for the same cause, a prosecution which proceeds ad vindictam publicam, and a prosecution or action ad civilem effectum, go on concurrently.

Concrete (kon'kré-át), v. t. pret. & pp. concreted; ppr. concreting. [Prefix con, and crete.] To create with or at the same time. 'A rule concreted with man.' Feltham.

If God did concrete grace with Adam, that grace was nevertheless grace for being given him as soon as he was made. Jer. Taylor.

Concredit† (kon-kred'it), v. t. To intrust. Barrow.

Concrementation† (kon-kre-má'shon), n. [L. concremo, to burn together—con, and cremo, to burn.] The act of burning different things together; the burning or cremation of a dead body.

When some one died drowned or in any other way which excluded concrementation and required burial, they made a likeness of him and put it on the altar of idols, together with a large offering of wine and bread. Quoted by H. Spencer.

Concrement† (kong'kré-mént), a. [L. L. concrementum, from concreco, to grow together. See CONCRETE.] A growing together; the collection or mass formed by concretion or natural union. 'The concrement of a pebble or flint.' Sir M. Hale.

Concrecence (kon-kre'sen), n. [L. concrecentia, concreo. See CONCRETE.] Growth or increase. Raleigh. [Rare.]

Concrecescible (kon-kre'si-bl), a. Capable of concreting; capable of being congealed or changed from a liquid to a solid state.

They formed a genuine, fixed, concrecescible oil. Trans. Fourmy.

Concrecive (kon-kre'siv), a. Growing together; uniting. [Rare.]

Concrete (kong-kret), a. [L. concretus, from concreo, to grow together—con, and creo, to grow.] 1. Formed by coalition of separate particles in one body; forming a mass; united in a solid form.

The first concrete state or consistent surface of the chaos must be of the same figure as the last liquid state. Sp. Bernad.

2. In logic, (a) a term applied to an object as it exists in nature, invested with all its attributes, or to the notion of such an object. (b) A term applied to names of concrete things; as, a concrete term.

A concrete notion is the notion of a body as it exists in nature invested with all its qualities. Fleming.

Concrete is opposed to abstract. The names of individuals are concrete, those of classes abstract. A concrete name is a name which stands for a thing; as, 'this table'; an abstract name is a name which stands for the attribute of a thing; as, 'this table is square.' J. S. Mill.

—Concrete number. See under ABSTRACT (a). 3. In music, a term appellative of a sound or movement of the voice which slides continuously up or down, as distinguished from a discrete movement, in which the voice leaps at once from one line of pitch to another.

Concrete (kong-kret), n. 1. A mass formed by concretion, spontaneous union, or coalescence of separate particles of matter in one body; a compound.

They pretend to be able by the fire to divide all concretes, minerals and others, into distinct substances. Boyle.

2. In gram, and logic, a concrete term. See the adjective, 2 (b).—3. A compact mass of gravel, coarse pebbles, or stone chippings cemented together by hydraulic or other mortar. It is employed extensively in building under water, for example, to form the bottom of a canal or the foundations of any structure raised in the sea, as piers, breakwaters, &c. The walls of houses are sometimes formed of this compound, the ingredients being first firmly rammed into moulds of the requisite shape, and allowed to set.

Concrete (kon-kret), v. t. pret. & pp. concreted; ppr. concreting. To unite or coalesce into a mass or solid body; to form concretions; to coagulate; to congeal; to thicken.

The particles of tingling substances and salts dissolved in water do not of their own accord concrete and fall to the bottom. Boyle.

The blood of some who died in the plague could not be made to concrete. Arbutnot.

Concrete (kon-kret), v. t. 1. To form into a mass by the cohesion or coalescence of separate particles.

There are in our inferior world divers bodies that are concreted out of others. Sir M. Hale.

2. To combine so as to form a concrete notion. 'Were we necessitated to contemplate colour concreted with figure, two attributes which the eye can never view but associated.' Harris.

Concretely (kon-kret'li), adv. In a concrete manner; not abstractly. 'The properties of bodies . . . taken concretely together with their subjects.' Cudworth.

Concreteness (kon-kret'nes), n. A state of being concrete.

Concrete-press (kong-kret'pres), n. A machine for making concrete blocks.

Concretion (kon-kre'shon), n. 1. The act of concreting; the act of growing together, or becoming naturally united so as to form one mass.—2. The mass or solid matter formed by growing together, by congealation, condensation, coagulation, or induration; a clot; a lump. 'Concretions of slime.' Bacon. 3. In geol, a nodule, as of chert, ironstone, the grains and spherules of oolite, and the grape-like clusters of magnesian limestone, formed by molecular aggregation as distinct from crystallization.—4. In logic, the act of regarding in the concrete or as existing in nature: opposed to abstraction.

The mind surmounts all power of concretion, and can place in the simplest manner every attribute by itself. Harris.

—Norbid concretions, in the animal economy, are hard substances which occasionally make their appearance in different parts of the body, as well in the solids as in those cavities destined to contain fluids; in the former case they are usually denominated concretions or ossifications, and are named from the parts of the body in which they occur; as, pineal concretions, salivary concretions, hepatic concretions, &c.

Concretional (kon-kre'shon-al), a. Pertaining to concretion; formed by concretion. Brande & Cox.

Concretory (kon-kre'shon-ar-i), a. Formed by concretion; concretional.—Concretory deposits, in geol, a term applied to designate those recent alluvial strata which include calcareous and other deposits from springs, stalactites, travertines, bog-iron ore, and salt.—Concretory structure, in geol, a structure such as that exhibited by masses formed by aggregation as distinct from crystallization. See CONCRETION.

Concretive (kon-kre'tiv), a. Causing to concrete; having power to produce concretion; tending to form a solid mass from separate particles. 'Concretive juices.' Sir T. Browne.

Concretively (kon-kre'tiv-li), adv. 1. In a concretive manner.—2. Concretely; not abstractly. Jer. Taylor.

Concreture (kon-kre'tür), n. A mass formed by concretion. Johnson.

Concrew (kon-kro'), v. t. [For conerus, from L. concreo, to grow together—con, together, and creo, to grow; comp. accruo.] To grow together. Spenser.

Concrimination (kon-krim'i-nä'shon), n. A joint accusation. Maunder.

Concubaria (kon-kü-bä'ri-a), n. A fold, pen, or place where cattle lie. Cowell.

Concubinary (kon-kü'bi-nä-si), n. The practice of concubinage.

Their country was very infamous for concubinary, adultery, and incest. Siryp.

Concubinage (kon-kü'bi-nä-si), n. [Fr. See CONCUBINE.] 1. The act or practice of cohabiting, as man and woman, in sexual commerce, without a legal marriage; the state of being a concubine.

The bad tendency of Mr. Pope's 'Eloisa to Abbeard' is remarked by Sir John Hawkins . . . as depreciating matrimony and justifying concubinage. Sp. Horne.

2. In law, an exception against a woman suing for dower, on the ground that she was the concubine and not the wife of the man of whose lands she seeks to be endowed.—3. An inferior kind of marriage allowed in some countries, performed with less solemnity than a true or formal marriage; or marriage with a woman of inferior condition, to whom the husband does not convey his rank or quality. See CONCUBINE, 3.

In United States colleges, to put under conditions; to require to pass a new examination as a condition of remaining in the class or college, as a student in some branch of study in which he has failed. Goodrich.

Condition (kon-di'shon), v.t. 1. To make terms; to stipulate. [Rare.]

Sir, I must condition
To have this gentleman by, a witness. B. Jonson.

2. In metaph. to place or cognize a thing under conditions or relations.

To think of a thing is to condition; and conditional limitation is the fundamental law of the possibility of thought. Sir W. Hamilton.

Conditional (kon-di'shon-al), a. 1. Imposing conditions; containing or depending on a condition or conditions; made with limitations; not absolute; made or granted on certain terms.

Every covenant of God with man, on the system of God's revealed will, is a covenant of grace or favour, which therefore may be justly made, as in fact it is made, with this conditional punishment annexed and declared. Warburton.

—A conditional fee, in law, is one which is granted upon condition that if the donee shall die without such particular heirs as are specified the estate shall revert to the donor; hence, it is a fee restrained to particular heirs to the exclusion of others.—Conditional limitation, a limitation which partakes of the nature both of a condition and a remainder. Such is the limitation to A for life, in tail or in fee, provided that, when C returns from Rome, it shall henceforth remain to the use of B in fee.—Conditional obligation, in civil law, an obligation depending on the existence of a condition. Conditions annexed to obligations are divided into possible and impossible; the former are such as may naturally or legally happen; the latter such as are contrary to the law or to good morals. Possible conditions are distinguished into potential or potestative, i.e. such as are within the power of the party burdened with them; and casual, being such as depend upon a certain event over which the party has no control.—2. In gram. and logic, expressing or involving a condition; as, a conditional word, mode, or tense; applied more specifically, in logic, sometimes to denote that class of propositions and syllogisms which is subdivided into hypothetical, disjunctive, and hypothetico-disjunctive or dilemmatic, sometimes as equivalent to hypothetical.

All hypothetical propositions, therefore, though disjunctive in form, are conditional in meaning; and the words hypothetical and conditional may be, as indeed they generally are, used synonymously. F. S. Mott.

Cathartes (Surinamensis griseus).

the large cartilaginous caruncle which surmounts its beak, and in the large size of its oval and longitudinal scutella placed almost at the very extremity of the cere. Its greatest expanse of wing is about 14 feet, but it seems rarely to attain that size. Humboldt met with none that exceeded 9 feet. These birds are found most commonly in the Andes chain, frequenting regions from 10,000 or 12,000 feet above the level of the sea, where they breed, making no nest, but laying their eggs on the bare rocks. They are never seen in large companies, but in groups of three or four, and only descend to the plains when impelled by hunger. Thus two of them will successfully attack sheep, goats, deer, &c. though as a rule they prefer to feast on carrion.

Confirmation (kon-färm'a'shon), n. 1. The act of confirming: (a) the act of establishing; a fixing, settling, establishing, or making more certain or firm; establishment.

In the defence and confirmation of the gospel, ye are all partakers of my grace. Phil. i. 7.

(b) The act of rendering more clear or showing to be true, as by new evidence; the act of corroborating; as, the confirmation of opinion or report.

A false report hath Honoured with confirmation your great judgment.
Shak.

(c) The act of rendering valid or ratifying, especially by formal assent; as, the confirmation of an appointment, grant, treaty, promise, covenant, or stipulation.

It was found impossible to obtain a repeal of the act of supremacy without the pope's explicit confirmation of the abbey lands to their new proprietors.
Hallam.

(d) Eccles. the act or ceremony of laying on of hands by a bishop in the admission of baptized persons to the enjoyment of Christian privileges; the person to be confirmed now taking upon himself the baptismal vows made in his name at his baptism. This is practised in the Greek, Roman Catholic, and English churches.

This ordinance is called confirmation, because they who duly receive it are confirmed or strengthened for the fulfilment of their Christian duties by the grace therein bestowed upon them. Hook.

2. That which confirms; that which gives new strength or assurance; additional evidence; proof; convincing testimony.

Trifles light as air
Are to the jealous confirmations strong
As proofs of holy writ. Shak.

3. In law, an assurance of title, by the conveyance of an estate or right in fee from one man to another, by which a voidable estate is made sure or unavoidable, or a particular estate is increased, or a possession made perfect.—Charter of confirmation, in Scots law, formerly a very common method of completing a purchaser's title. It ratified and confirmed the right granted to the purchaser, and the assent following upon it.—Confirmation of executor, the form in which a title is conferred on the executor of a person deceased, to intromit with and administer the defunct's movable effects, for behoof of the executor himself or of those interested in the succession.

Confirmative (kon-färm'a-tiv), a. Having the power of confirming; tending to establish; confirmatory; as, what you say is quite confirmative of my statement.

Confirmatively (kon-färm'a-tiv-li), adv. In a confirmative manner; so as to confirm.

Confirmator (kon-färm'a-tör), n. He who or that which confirms. Sir T. Browne. [Rare.]

Confirmatory (kon-färm'a-tor-i), a. 1. Serving to confirm; giving additional strength, force, or stability, or additional assurance or evidence.

Confiscatory (kon-fis'kä-tor-i), a. Consigning to forfeiture; relating to confiscation. 'Those terrible confiscatory and exterminatory periods.' Burke.

Conformist (kon-form'ist), n. One who conforms or complies; specifically, one who complies with the worship of the Church of England or of the Established Church, as distinguished from a Dissenter or Nonconformist.

The case is the same if the husband should be the conformist; though how the law is to operate in this case I do not see; for the act expressly says that the child shall be taken from such Popish parent.

Conformity (kon-form'i-ti), n. 1. Correspondence in form or manner; resemblance; agreement; congruity; likeness; correspondence; harmony: in this and next meaning followed by to or with before the object with which another agrees, and in before the matter in which there is agreement; as, a ship is constructed in conformity to or with a model; conformity in shape.

Space and duration have a great conformity in this, that they are justly reckoned among our simple ideas.

In conformity, indeed, to the unfeigned friendship which had been between us, I rejoice in every advantage that can attend you.

2. Correspondence with the decrees or dictates of; submission; accordance.

We cannot be otherwise happy but by our conformity to God.

The whole nation was sick of the government of the sword, and pined for government by the law. The restoration, therefore, even of anomalies and abuses, which were in strict conformity with the law, and which had been destroyed by the sword, gave general satisfaction.

Specifically—3. Eccles. compliance with the usages or principles of the English Church. 'A proclamation requiring all ecclesiastical and civil officers to do their duty by enforcing conformity.' Hallam.—Bill of conformity, in law, when an executor or administrator finds the affairs of his testator or intestate so much involved that he cannot safely administer the estate except under the direction of the Court of Chancery, he files a bill against the creditors generally, for the purpose of having all their claims adjusted and a final decree settling the order and payment of the assets. This bill is called a bill of conformity.

Confortation (kon-fér-tá-shon), n. [See COMFORT.] The act of strengthening.

For corroboration and confortation take such bodies as are of astringent quality.

To mingle confusedly together; to mix in a mass or crowd so that individuals cannot be distinguished; to throw into disorder; to confuse. With bluster to confound sea, earth, and shore. Milton. 'Confusion worse confounded.' Milton.

Let us go down, and there confound their language. Gen. xi. 7. 2. To mistake one for another; to make a mistake between; to regard as identical though different.

A fluid body and a wetting liquor are worst, because they agree in many things, to be confounded.

The thinkers then formed an hereditary caste. They were generally vagrants and pilferers, and were often confounded with the gipsies.

3. To throw into consternation; to perplex with terror, surprise, or astonishment; to stupefy with amazement; to abash.

So spake the Son of God; and Satan stood A while as mute, confounded what to say.

The sparrow's chirrup on the roof,
The slow clock ticking, and the sound
Which to the wooing wind aloof
The poplar made, did all confound

4. To destroy; to overthrow; to ruin. 'One man's lust these many lives confounds.' Shak. 'So deep a malice to confound the race of mankind.' Milton. Hence such interjectional phrases as, confound it! confound the fellow!

Which infinite calamity shall cause
To human life, and household peace confound.

5. † To waste or spend uselessly, as time. He did confound the best part of an hour
In changing hardiment with great Glendower.

—Abash, Confuse, Confound. See under ABASH.

Confounded (kon-found'ed), a. Excessive; odious; detestable; as, a confounded lie; a confounded humbug. [Colloq.]

Confucian (kon-fú-shi-an), a. Relating to Confucius.

Confucianism (kon-fú-shi-an-izm), n. The doctrines or system of morality taught by Confucius, which has been long adopted in China as the basis of jurisprudence and education. It inculcates the worship of no god, and can scarcely therefore be called a religion.

Confucianism appeals to 'practical' men. It lauds the present world; rather doubts than otherwise the existence of a future one; and calls upon all to cultivate such virtues as are seemly in citizens—industry, modesty, sobriety, gravity, decorum, and thoughtfulness. . . . Confucianism, in consequence, almost immediately after the death of its founder, became the religion of the state, to which it has proved an admirable ally; its theory of government being nothing less than a paternal despotism.

Chambers's Ency.

Confusability (kon-fúr-a-bil'i-ti), n. Capability of being confused. North Brit. Rev.

Confusable (kon-fúr-a-bl), a. Capable of being confused.

Confuse (kon-fúr'), v.t. pret. & pp. confused; pp. confusing. [L. confusus; Fr. confus, from L. confundo. See CONFOUND.] 1. To mix up without order or clearness; to bring disorder among; to throw together indiscriminately; to derange; to disorder; to jumble; to involve; as, a careless book-keeper has confused the accounts; the clamour confused his ideas.

What the people but a herd confused,
A miscellaneous rabble?

2. To perplex or derange the mind or ideas of; to embarrass; to disconcert; to cause to lose self-possession; to confound. 'Has the shock, so harshly given, confused me.' Tennyson.

Confused and sadly she at length replied.
The want of arrangement and connexion confuses the reader.

—Abash, Confuse, Confound. See under ABASH.—SYN. To derange, disorder, jumble, involve, abash, disconcert, confound, embarrass, distract.

Confusedness (kon-fúzd-nes), n. A state of being confused; want of order, distinction, or clearness.

The cause of the confusedness of our notions, next to natural inability, is want of attention.

Confusely (kon-fúzl'), adv. Confusedly; obscurely.

As when a name lodg'd in the memory,
But yet through time almost obliterated,
Confusely hovers near the phantom.

Confusion (kon-fúzhon), n. [L. confusio. See CONFUSE, CONFOUND.] 1. A state in which things are so confused or mixed together as to cause perplexity or obscurity; an indiscriminate or disorderly mingling; disorder; tumultuous condition; as, the confusion of the crowd; a confusion of ideas.

'The confusion of thought to which the Aristotelians were liable.' Whewell.

God only wise, to punish pride of wit,
Among men's wits hath this confusion wrought:

As the proud tow'r, whose points the clouds did hit,
By tongues' confusion was to ruin brought.

The whole city was filled with confusion.
And never yet did insurrection want
Such war-colours to impart his cause;
Nor moody beggars starving for a time
Of pellucid havoc and confusion.

2. Perturbation of mind; embarrassment; distraction.

Confusion dwelt in every face,
And fear in every heart.

3. Abashment; shame.

We lie down in our shame, and our confusion creeth us.
So that we have no kind of thing in the world but our sins and follies that we can call our own; and those, God knows, are so far from affording matter of boasting to us, that they ought to fill us with shame and confusion.

4. Overthrow; defeat; ruin.

Ruin seize thee, ruthless king!
Confusion on thy banners wait.

5. A crime against nature. Lev. xviii 23.—6. † One who confuses; a confounder. Chapman.—7. In gram. applied to words from the same root, and having the same radical signification, but modified by the affix added, as short, shortness, shorten, shortly; or to words which have the same form but are different parts of speech, as strait, n., and strait, a.—5. In math. a term applied to two points, lines, &c., when they are considered together, with regard to any property, in such a manner that they may be interchanged without altering the way of enunciating the property.—Conjugate axis or diameter, in the conic sections, is the axis or diameter parallel to a tangent to the curve, at the vertex of another axis or diameter to which that is a conjugate. In the ellipse the conjugate diameter bisects the transverse diameter at right angles.—Conjugate hyperbolas, also called adjacent hyperbolas, are such as have the same axes, but in the contrary order, the first or principal axis of the one being the second axis of the other, and the second axis of the former being the first axis of the latter.—Conjugate point of a curve, a single point lying by itself, whose co-ordinates satisfy the equation of the curve, without its actually being on any continuous branch of the curve.—Conjugate foci, in optics. (a) When rays, falling upon a lens, are so refracted as to converge and meet in a point, either nearer the lens than the principal focus or farther from it, the point in which they meet, and the principal focus, are called, with respect to each other, conjugate foci.

Thus, the parallel rays cA, cB, falling upon the lens A B, converge in the principal focus b; but the rays d d, which have an inclination towards each other before entering the lens, converge at a; therefore a and b are conjugate foci in the case illustrated. (b) Two points in one of which are collected, after reflection, as by a spherical mirror, or refraction, as by a double convex lens, the rays emitted from the other.—Conjugate mirrors, two mirrors placed face to face so that each reflects rays of light or heat to the other.

Conjugation (kon-jú-gá-shon), n. [L. conjugo, See CONJUGATE.] 1. A couple or pair. 'The sixth conjugation or pair of nerves.' Sir T. Browne.—2. The act of uniting or combining; a coming together; union; conjunction; assemblage.

All the various mixtures and conjugations of atoms do beget nothing. Bentley.

3. In gram. (a) the inflection of a verb in its different voices, moods, tenses, numbers, and persons; a connected scheme of all the deriv-ouring matter, being spiral, stellate, or otherwise disposed, and not equally diffused, or simply denser in the centre. The large active forms of a verb. (b) A class of verbs conjugated in the same way; as, Latin verbs of the third conjugation. — 4. In biol. a union of two distinct cells in order to reproduction, as in the Coniferaceae and Diatomaceae. Thus, two filaments of Zygnema and some analogous genera are seen to unite by means of tubes projected from each, and the contents of one cell are poured into the other, called a mother cell, the result of which is a germinating spore. The same process takes place in the case of some of the lower animals, as the Diplosoön.

Conjugational (kon-jū-gā-shon-al), a. Of or belonging to conjugation; as, one of the conjugational forms of a verb.

Conjugal (kon-jū-jil-al), a. Conjugal. 'Conjugal love.' Noble.

Conjunct (kon-jungkt'), a. [L. conjunctus, from conjungo. See CONJOIN.] Conjoined; united; concurrent.

It pleases the king his master to strike at me, When he, conjunct and flattering his displeasure, Tript me behind. Shak.

He discusses the conjunct questions with great acuteness from every point of view. Sir W. Hamilton.

—Conjunct rights, in Scots law, rights belonging to two or more persons jointly.

Conjunct (kon-jungkt'), n. A combination; an association; a union. Creech. [Rare.]

We will unite the white rose with the red; Smile, heaven, upon this fair conjunction. Shak.

2. The copulation of the sexes. Jer. Taylor.

3. In astron. the meeting of two or more stars or planets in the same degree of the zodiac; as, the conjunction of the moon with the sun, or of Jupiter and Saturn. The planets, relatively to the earth, are separated into two divisions, inferior and superior, the former having their orbits within and the latter without that of the earth. When a planet, as seen from the earth, is in the same direction as the sun, it is said to be in conjunction with the sun. This, however, in the case of an inferior planet, may be either when it passes between the sun and the earth or when it is on the farther side of the sun; the former is the inferior and the latter the superior conjunction. A superior planet can only be once in conjunction with the sun during its revolution, namely, when the sun is in a direct line between it and the earth. See SYZYGY and OPPOSITION.

4. In gram. a connective indeclinable particle, serving to unite words, sentences, or clauses of a sentence, and indicating their relation to one another. There are two principal kinds of conjunctions — the conjunctive and the disjunctive; as, Peter and James, Robert or Ralph — and being called conjunctive, or disjunctive; but the latter is by no means a happy term. Conjunctions are further subdivided into conditional, adverbative, illative, &c., as if, notwithstanding, therefore, &c.

Conjunctional (kon-jungk-shon-al), a. Belonging or relating to a conjunction; as, the conjunctional use of a word.

Conjunctively (kon-jungk-shon-al-ly), adv. In a conjunctive manner.

Conjunctiva (kon-jungk-tiv-a), n. In anat. the mucous membrane which lines the inner surface of the eyelids, and is continued over the fore-part of the globe of the eye. Called more fully the Conjunctiva Tertia.

Conjunctival (kon-jungk-tiv-al), a. Of or pertaining to the conjunctiva. — Conjunctival membrane, in anat. the conjunctiva (which see).

Conjunctive (kon-jungk-tiv), a. [L. conjunctivus, from conjungo. See CONJOIN.] 1. Closely united. 'She's so conjunctive to my life and soul.' Shak. — 2. Uniting; serving to unite. 'Some (conjunctions) are conjunctive, and some disjunctive.' Harris. — Conjunctive mood, in gram. the mood which follows a conjunction or expresses some condition or contingency. It is more generally called Subjunctive.

Conjunctively (kon-jungk-tiv-ly), adv. In a conjunctive or combined manner; together.

Of Strasburg and Ulm I may speak conjunctively. Wotton.

Conjunctiveness (kon-jungk-tiv-nes), n. The quality of being conjunctive. Johnson.

Conjunctly (kon-jungk-tiv-ly), adv. In a conjunct manner; in union; jointly; together.

They must be understood conjunctly, so as always to go together. Bp. Beveridge.

The theory of the syllogism in Depth (far lies in both quantities conjunctly) was not generalized by Aristotle. Sir W. Hamilton.

—Conjunctly and severally, a term in Scots law applicable when two or more persons are bound to the performance of an obligation in such a manner that they are each liable for the whole, and it is optional to exact performance either from each of them proportionally or to exact the obligation to the full extent against any one of them, leaving him to seek his relief from the others.

Conjuncture (kon-jungk-tūr), n. [Fr. conjoncture. See CONJOIN.] 1. The act of joining or state of being joined; a combination; union; connection. 'The conjuncture of philosophy and divinity.' Hobbes. — 2. Combination of circumstances or affairs; especially, a critical time, proceeding from a union of circumstances; a crisis of affairs; as, at that conjuncture peace was very desirable.

He (Chesterfield) had recently governed Ireland, at a momentous conjuncture, with eminent firmness, wisdom, and humanity. Macaulay.

Conjuration (kon-jū-rā-shon), n. [In first two meanings from conjure, in 3 directly from L. conjuratio, a conspiracy. See CONJURE.]

1. The act of calling on or summoning by a sacred name; the act of imploring with solemnity; the act of binding by an oath; adjuration.

We charge you, in the name of God, take heed . . . Under this conjuration speak, my lord. Shak.

2. A magical form of words with the view of evoking supernatural aid; an incantation; an enchantment; a magic spell. 'What conjuration, and what mighty magic, I won his daughter with.' Shak. — 3. A conspiracy; a plot; a league for criminal ends. 'The conjuration of Cadiz.' Sir T. Eliot.

Conjurator (kon-jū-rā-tēr), n. In old English law, one bound by an oath with others; a conjurer.

Conjure (formerly kon-jūr' or kon-jūr; for present pron. see below), v.t. pret. & pp. conjured; ppr. conjuring. [L. conjuro, to swear together, to conspire — con, with, and juro, to swear, whence also jury, perjure.] 1. (pron. kon-jūr') To call on or summon by a sacred name or in a solemn manner; to implore with solemnity; to adjure.

I conjure you! let him know, What'er was done against him, Cato did it. Addison.

Connect (kon-nekt'), v.t. [L. connecto, con- + necto, to bind.] 1. To fasten together; to join or unite; to conjoin; to combine; to associate; as, to connect ideas; the Strait of Gibraltar connects the Mediterranean with the Atlantic; a treaty connects two nations; the interests of agriculture are connected with those of commerce; families are connected by marriage or by friendship.

To him no high, no low, no great, no small; He fills, he bounds, connects, and equals all. Pope.

[This word is not of early use. It does not occur in Milton's poems, in Shakspeare, or in the Bible.]

Connect (kon-nekt'), v.t. To join, unite, or cohere; as, this part will not connect with what goes before. Bp. Horne.

Connectedly (kon-nekt'ed-ly), adv. By connection; in a connected manner; conjointly.

Connecting-rod (kon-nekt'ing-rod), n. In engin. (a) the coupling-rod which connects the piston with the crank of the driving-wheel axle of locomotive engines. (b) The outside coupling-rod which connects the wheels of locomotive engines. (c) The rod connecting the cross-head of a beam-engine with that end of the working-beam which plays over the cylinder.

Connection, Connexion (kon-nek-shon), n. [L. connexio. See CONNECT.] 1. The act of connecting or state of being connected; the act of joining or state of being joined; union by junction, by an intervening substance or medium, by dependence or relation, or by order in a series. 'Connection between cause and effect.' Whewell. 'The close connection between vicious theory and vicious practice.' Macaulay.

My heart, which by a secret harmony Still moves with thine, joined in connection sweet. Milton.

Each intermediate idea must be such as, in the whole chain, hath a visible connection with the two it is placed between. Locke.

2. Relationship by blood or marriage, but more specifically by marriage; hence, a person connected with another by this relationship. —3. Circle of persons with whom any one is brought into contact; as, a large business connection. —4. An association or united body; a religious sect; as, the Methodist Connection. —In this connection, in connection with what is now under consideration; as, in this connection I may remark, &c., a phrase said to be of American origin, but now freely used by writers in this country also. —SYN. Union, coherence, continuity, junction, association, dependence, intercourse, commerce, communication, affinity, relationship.

Connective (kon-nek'tiv), a. Having the power of connecting; tending to connect; connecting. —Connective tissue. Same as Cellular Tissue. See under CELLULAR.

Connect (kon-nekt), v.t. [L. connecto, connexum. See CONNECT.] To link together; to join; to connect. Sir M. Hale.

Connexion, n. See CONNECTION.

Connexional (kon-nek'shon-al), a. 1. Pertaining to or having the nature of a connection. —2. Pertaining to a connection in the sense of a religious sect.

Connexive (kon-nek'siv), a. Connective. 'This connexive particle,' therefore. Milton. 'Connexive particles.' Watts. [Rare.]

Connictation (kon-nik'tá'shon), n. [L. con-nictatio—con, and nicto, to wink.] The act of winking. Bailey.

Conning, Cunning (kon'ing, kun'ing), n. [See the verb CON.] Among seamen, the act or art of directing the steersman to guide the ship in her proper course.

Connivance (kon-niv'ans), n. The act of conniving; voluntary blindness to an act; intentional forbearance to see a fault or other act, generally implying consent to it.

It is better to mitigate usury by declaration than to suffer it to rage by connivance. Bacon. Such abuses had gradually prevailed and gained strength by connivance. Hollam.

Connivancy (kon-niv'an-si), n. Same as Connivance. See first extract under CONNIVE. Also written Connivency.

Connive (kon-niv), v.i. pret. & pp. connived; ppr. conniving. [L. conniveo, to wink, to wink at, to connive at an error, &c.—con, together, and niveo, to wink, allied to nico, to beckon, and nicto, to wink.] 1. To wink; to close and open the eyelids rapidly.

The artist is to teach them how to nod judiciously, and to connive with either eye. Spectator.

2. Fig. to close the eyes upon a fault or other act; to pretend ignorance or blindness; to forbear to see; to overlook a fault or other act and suffer it to pass unnoticed, uncensured, or unpunished; followed by at; as, the father connives at the vices of his son.

I have connived at this, your friend and you, But what is got by this connivancy? Beau. & Fl. He (Charles II.) publicly took the sacrament at Oxford as a pledge that he never would even connive at Popery. Macaulay.

Connive (kon-niv) v.t. To shut one's eyes to; to wink at. Milton. [Rare.]

Connivency (kon-niv'en-si), n. Connivance (which see). Hales.

Connivent (kon-niv'ent), a. [See CONNIVE.] 1. Shutting the eyes; forbearing to see; wilfully blind; inattentive. 'Justice connivent, or, if I may so say, occultant and supine.' Milton. —2. In nat. hist. having a gradually inward direction; converging; as, the connivent wings of an insect, or leaves of a flower. —Connivent valves, in anat. those wrinkles or folds of the lining membrane of canals which are so disposed as to retard, while at the same time they permit the passage of the contents of such canals.

Conniver (kon-niv'ér), n. One who connives. Abettors, counsellors, consenters, commanders, connivers, concealers; each of these will be found guilty before God's tribunal. Junius.

Connoisseur (kon'is-sür), n. [O. Fr. connoisseur, Mod. Fr. connaissance, from the verb connoître, connaître, from L. cognosco, to know. See COGNIZANCE.] A critical judge of any art, particularly of painting and sculpture; one competent to pass a critical judgment upon anything; one that can pick out what is superior from a number of things.

Your lesson learn'd, you'll be secure To get the name of connoisseur. Swift. The connoisseur is one who knows, as opposed to the dilettant, who only thinks he knows. Fairholt.

Connoisseurship (kon'is-sür-ship), n. The rôle or part of a connoisseur.

Connotate (kon'ò-tát), v.t. pret. & pp. connotated; ppr. connotating. [L. con, together, and noto, notatum, to note, to mark.] 1. To include in the meaning; to connote: said of a word.

God's foreseeing doth not include or connotate pre-determining. Hammond.

2. To involve; to imply. 'Law and punishment being relations, and mutually connotating each the other.' Bp. Reynolds. [Rare.] Connotation (kon'ò-tá'shon), n. That which constitutes the meaning of a word; the attributes expressed by a word. See extract.

The more usual mode of declaring the connotation of a name is by predicating two or more connotative names which make up among them the whole connotation of the name to be defined; as, Man is a corporeal, organized, animated, rational being, shaped so and so; or we may employ names which connote several of the attributes at once, as, Man is a rational animal shaped so and so. J. S. Mill.

Connotative (kon'ò-tá-tiv), a. Connoting; significant. See CONNOTE and CONNOTATION.

Proper names are not connotative; they denote the individuals who are called by them; but they do not indicate or imply any attributes as belonging to those individuals. J. S. Mill.

Connote (kon-nót), v.t. pret. & pp. connoted; ppr. connoting. [L. con, and noto, to mark. See NOTE.] To include in the meaning; to comprise among the attributes expressed; to imply.

Good, in the general sense of it, connotes also a certain suitableness of it to some other thing. South.

—Note, Denote, Connote. Note is generic, and means to mark in any way. Connote and denote are distinguished in logic, the former referring to the qualities which a word expresses; the latter to the individuals or objects to which it is applied. Thus the word 'horse' connotes the qualities that distinguish a horse from other animals, and denotes the class of animals which are characterized by having these qualities. There is a corresponding distinction between the derivatives connotation, connotative, and denotation, denotative. Thus proper names have no connotation or are not connotative, but they are denotative. Thames is the name of a particular river, which is the denotation of that word, but as it is not given to the river in virtue of any attributes, that name is not connotative.

Connote (kon-nót), v.i. To have a meaning or signification in connection with another word.

Some grammarians have said that an adjective only connotes, and means nothing by itself. Herne Took.

Connubial (kon-nü-bi-al), a. [L. connubialis, from connubium, marriage—con, and nubo, to marry.] Pertaining to marriage; nuptial; belonging to the state of husband and wife. 'Connubial love.' Milton. 'Connubial rites.' Pope.

Connubiality (kon-nü-bi-al'i-ti), n. The state of being connubial; anything pertaining to the state of husband and wife. 'With the view of stopping some connubialities which had begun to pass.' Dickens.

Connubially (kon-nü-bi-al-ly), adv. In a connubial manner; as man and wife.

Connumerate (kon-nü-mér-át), v.t. To reckon or count in with anything else. 'Ought to be connumerated or reckoned together.' Cudworth.

Connumeration (kon-nü-mér-át'shon), n. A reckoning together. Porson.

Connusance (kon'y-sans), n. [Fr. connaissance.] In law, cognizance (which see).

Connusant (kon'y-sant), a. In law, knowing; informed; cognizant.

Connusor (kon-y-sor). Same as Cognizor. Connutritious (kon-nü-trí'shu), a. [Prefix con, together, and nutritious.] Nutritious by force of habit. Smart.

Conocarp (kò'nò-kárp), n. [Gr. kónos, a cone, and karpós, fruit.] In bot. a fruit consisting of a collection of carpels arranged upon a conical centre, as the strawberry.

Conodont (kò'nò-dont), n. [Gr. kónos, a cone, and odontos, a tooth.] In geol. the name given to certain minute, glistening, curved, slender bodies, hollow at the base and tapering to a slender end, found in great profusion in the silurian schists of Russia. They are supposed to be the spines, or hooklets, or denticles of naked molluscs and annelids.

Conohelix (kò'nò-hé'liks), n. [Gr. kónos, a cone, and hélix, a spiral.] A genus of turbinated shells, of the family Muricidae.

Conoid (kò'nó'id), n. [Gr. kónoideia—kónos, a cone, and eidós, form.] 1. In geom. (a) a solid formed by the revolution of a conic section about its axis. If the conic section is a parabola the resulting solid is a paraboloid conoid or paraboloid; if a hyperbola, the solid is a hyperbolic conoid or hyperboloid; if an ellipse, an elliptic conoid, a spheroid, or an ellipsoid. (b) A skew surface which may be generated by a straight line moving in such a manner as to touch a straight line and curve, and continue parallel to a given plane. —2. In anat. the pineal gland.

Conoid (kò'nó'id), a. Having the form of a cone; conoidal.

Conoidal (kò'nó'id-al), a. Approaching to a conical form; nearly but not exactly conical.

Conoidic, Conoidical (kò'nó'id'ik, kò'nó'id'ik-al), a. Pertaining to a conoid; having the form of a conoid.

Conominee (kò'nóm'in-é or kò'nóm'in-é'), n. One named or designated as an associate; a joint nominee.

Conoscente (kò-no-sen'tá), n. Same as Cognoscente.

Conquadrante (kon-kwod'rát), v.t. [L. con, together, and quadratus, squared. See QUADRATE.] To bring into a square. Ash. [Rare.]

Conquassate (kon-kwas'sát), v.t. pret. & pp. conquassated; ppr. conquassating. [L. conquasso, conquassatum, from con, together, and quatio, quassum, to shake.] To shake.

Vomits do violently conquassate the lungs. Harvey.

Conquassation (kon-kwas-sá'shon), n. Concussion; agitation. Bailey.

Conquer (kong'kér), v.t. [O. Fr. conquerre, conquerre, Mod. Fr. conquérir, from L. con-quirro, to seek for, go in quest of, procure—con, together, and quero, to seek, ask, gain (whence quest and query).] 1. To subdue in war; to reduce by physical force till resistance is no longer made; to bring under one's power; to vanquish; to gain by force; to gain dominion over.

If we be conquer'd let men conquer us, And not these basard Bretons. Shak.

And though mine arm should conquer twenty worlds, There's a lean fellow beats all conquerors. Dexter. We conquer'd France, but felt our captive's charms; Their arts victorious triumph'd o'er our arms. Pope.

2. To overcome or surmount, as obstacles, difficulties, or anything that hinders progress. —3. To gain or obtain by effort.

It was only after a strenuous opposition from these bodies that ancient literature at last conquered its recognition as an element of academical instruction. Sir W. Hamilton.

—Conquer, Vanquish, Subdue, Subjugate, Overcome. These words agree in the general idea expressed by overcome, viz. that of bringing under one's power by the exertion of force, of getting the better of by an effort. Conquer is wider and more general than vanquish, denoting usually a succession of struggles or conflicts; while vanquish refers more commonly to a single conflict. Thus Alexander the Great conquered Asia in a succession of battles, and vanquished Darius in one decisive engagement. Subdue implies a more gradual and continued pressure, but a surer and more decisive subjection. Subjugate is to bring completely under the yoke of bondage. —SYN. To subdue, vanquish, overcome, overpower, overthrow, defeat, rout, discomfit, subjugate, reduce, humble, crush, surmount, subject, master. Conquer (kong'kér), v.t. To overcome; to gain the victory. 'Resolv'd to conquer or to die.' Walter.

Conquerable (kong'kér-a-bl), a. Capable of being conquered, overcome, or subdued. 'Revenge . . . which yet we are sure is con-querable under all the strongest temptations to it.' Atterbury.

Conquerableness (kong'kér-a-bl-nes), n. A state of being conquerable.
Conqueress (kong'kér-es), n. A female who conquers; a victorious female.

O Truth! thou art a mighty conqueress.

Beau. & Fl.

Conqueringly (kong'kér-ing-ly), adv. By conquering.

Conquerment (kong'kér-ment), n. Conquest. Bp. Hall. [Rare.]

Conqueror (kong'kér-ér), n. One who conquers; one who gains a victory; one who subdues and brings into subjection or possession by force or by influence.

This England never did, nor never shall,

Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror.

But when it first did help to wound itself. Shak.

...The Conqueror, an epithet applied to William I. as expressing his conquest of England in 1066. As originally applied, however, the name was not exactly synonymous with conqueror in the modern sense.

William, we must always remember, did not give himself out as a conqueror. The name conqueror, conquerment, though applied with perfect truth in the common sense, must strictly be taken in the legal meaning of purchaser or acquirer. E. A. Freeman.

Conquest (kong'kwést), n. [O. Fr. conquest, Fr. conquête, from conquiescere, pp. of conquiro, to procure. See CONQUER.] 1. The act of conquering; the act of overcoming or vanquishing opposition by force, physical or moral; subjugation; victory: followed by of before the persons conquered, or the territory or thing gained by conquest; as, the conquest of the French by the Germans; the conquest of India by Britain; a nation's conquest of its liberty. 2. A purity that has been won by struggle and conquest. Dr. Caird. When used absolutely it often means specifically extension of territory by force of arms.

Conquest and good husbandry both enlarge the king's dominions; the one by the sword, making the acres more in number; the other by the plough, making the same acres more in value. Fuller.

In joys of conquest he resigns his breath. Addison.
Three years sufficed for the conquest of the country. Prescott.

2. The act of gaining as the result of a struggle or conflict; as, the conquest of a nation's liberty. — 3. That which is conquered; possession gained by force, physical or moral.

What conquest brings he home?

What tributaries follow him to Rome? Shak.

4. In feudal law, acquisition; acquisition; the acquiring of property by other means than by inheritance, or the acquisition of property by a number in community or by one for all the others. — 5. In Soots law, heritable property acquired in any other way than by heritage, as by purchase, donation, &c.; or with reference to a marriage contract, heritable property subsequently acquired. — The Conquest, by pre-eminence, in Eng. hist. the conquest of England by William, duke of Normandy (afterwards William I.), in 1066.
Conquistador (kong-kwi-zí'shón), n. [L. conquistator, from conquiro, to seek for. See CONQUER.] A gathering together; a seeking for the purpose of making a collection. 'The conquisition of some costly marbles and cedars.' Bp. Hall.

'Invoking aid by the ties of consanguinity and a common faith.' Prescott.

I know no touch of consanguinity;

No kin, no love, no blood. Shak.

Consecration (kon-sér'si-ná'shón), n. [L. consecratio, to sew or patch together.] The act of patching together. Bailey.

Conscientia (kon'shén-si), n. [Fr., from L. conscientia, from conscio, to know, to be privy to—prefix con, with, and scio, to know.]

1.† Conscientiousness; knowledge of our own actions or thoughts.

Merit and good works is the end of man's motion; and conscience of the same is the accomplishment of man's rest. Bacon.

The sweetest cordial we receive at last,

Is conscience of our virtuous actions past. Sir J. Denham.

2. Private or inward thoughts; real sentiments.

By my troth, I will speak my conscience of the king; I think he would not wish himself anywhere but where he is. Shak.

Do you in conscience think—tell me, Emilia—

That there be women do abuse their husbands

In such gross kind. Shak.

3. The faculty, power, or principle within us, which decides on the rightness or wrongness of our own actions and affections; the sense of right and wrong. — A bad conscience, a reproving conscience. — A good conscience, an approving conscience.

My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,

And every tongue brings in a several tale.

And every tale condemns me for a villain. Shak.

Whatever creed be taught, or land be trod,

Man's conscience is the oracle of God. Ryerson.

Conscience is the reason employed about questions of right and wrong, and accompanied with the sentiments of approbation and condemnation. W. Howells.

4. Morality; what a good conscience would approve.

He had, against right and conscience, by shameful treachery intruded himself into another man's kingdom. Knoles.

—In all conscience, to be reasonable, to keep within the bounds of moderation: a form of amercement. [Colloq.]

Half a dozen fools are, in all conscience, as many as you should require. Swift.

—In conscience, with a good conscience, in justice, in honesty, in truth.

What you require cannot, in conscience, be deferred. Milton.

—To make conscience, to make a matter of conscience, to act according to the dictates of conscience; to scruple to act contrary to the dictates of conscience.

Children are travellers newly arrived in a strange country; we should therefore make conscience not to deceive them. Locke.

—Court of conscience, a court established for the recovery of small debts in London and other trading cities and districts. — Conscience clause, a clause or article in an act or law dealing more or less with religious matters, and which specially relieves persons who object to engage in or be present during religious services or acts there enjoined or named, from conscientious scruples, as in taking judicial oaths or having their children present at school during the time of religious instruction or service. — Conscience money, money paid to relieve the conscience, as money sent to the chancellor of the exchequer in payment of a tax which has previously been evaded.

Conscientious (kon'shén-si), a. Having conscience. 'Young conscientious casuists.' Sir W. Davenant. [Rare.]

Conscientiousness (kon'shén-si-nes), a. Having no conscience. 'Conscientiousness and wicked patrons, of which sort the swarm are too great in England.' Hooker.

The heredit, guilty and conscientious to himself of reformatory. Whitlock.

2. Influenced by conscience; governed by a strict regard to the dictates of conscience, or by the known or supposed rules of right and wrong; as, a conscientious judge. — 3. Regulated by conscience; according to the dictates of conscience. 'Lead a life in so conscientious a probity.' Sir R. L'Estrange. — SYN. Scrupulous, exact, faithful, upright.

Conscientiously (kon'shí-en'shús-ly), adv. In a conscientious manner; according to the direction of conscience; with a strict regard to right and wrong.

If the conscience happens to be deluded, sin does not therefore cease to be sin, because a man committed it conscientiously. South.

Conscientiousness (kon'shí-en'shús-nes), n. 1. The state or quality of being conscientious; a scrupulous regard to the decisions of conscience; a sense of justice and strict conformity to its dictates.

There were the high Christian graces, conscientiousness such as few kings are able or dare to display on the throne, which never swerved through ambition or policy from strict rectitude. Milman.

2. In phren. one of the moral sentiments having a special organ. It is classed among the sentiments proper to man.

Conscionable (kon'shón-a-bl), a. ['An ill-coined word, used as a contraction of conscience-able; the regular formation from the verb conscire, to be conscious, would be conscible, which was probably thought to be too brief. Conscionable is a sort of a compromise between conscible and conscience-able.] 1. Governed by conscience; according to conscience; reasonable; just.

If the minister's part be rightly discharged it renders the people more conscionable, quiet, and easy to be governed. Milton.

Let my debtors have conscionable satisfaction. Watson.

2.† Endowed with a conscience.

A knave, very voluble; no further conscionable than in putting on the mere form of civil and humane seeming. Shak.

Conscionableness (kon'shón-a-bl-nes), n. The state or quality of being conscionable; reasonableness; equity.

Conscionably (kon'shón-a-blí), adv. In a conscionable manner; reasonably; justly. Jer. Taylor.

Conscious (kon'shús), a. [L. conscius—con, and scio, to know.] 1. Possessing the faculty or power of knowing what affects or what goes on in one's own mind.

Among substances some are thinking or conscious beings, or have a power of thought. Watts.

2. Having direct knowledge of a thing; having such a knowledge as is conveyed by immediate sensation or perception: in this and the following sense now always with of before the object of consciousness, formerly sometimes with to, and still often with to before the reflexive pronoun.

Slowly and conscious of the raging eye

That watch'd him, went Leolin. Tennyson.

Æneas only, conscious to the sign.

Presaged the event. Dryden.

3. Knowing from conscience or from an internal persuasion; aware; sensible. 'As if he were conscious to himself that he had played his part well upon the stage.' Bacon.

The queen had been solicitous with the king on his behalf, being conscious to herself that he had been encouraged by her. Clarendon.

4. Having become the subject of consciousness; known to one's self; as, conscious guilt. 'Afresh with conscious terrors vex me round.' Milton.

Consciously (kon'shús-ly), adv. In a conscious manner; with knowledge of one's own mental operations or actions.

If these perceptions, with their consciousness, always remained in the mind, the same thinking thing would be always consciously present.

Consciousness (kon'shús-nes), n. 1. The faculty of knowing what affects or what goes on in one's own mind; as, consciousness distinguishes sentient from non-sentient beings. — 2. Immediate knowledge, such as is given in sensation and perception.

Consciousness is thus, on the one hand, the recognition by the mind or 'ego' of its acts and affections—in other words, the self-affirmation that certain modifications are known by me and that these modifications are mine. Sir W. Hamilton.

3. Internal persuasion; feeling; as, he had a secret consciousness that his confederate would prove false. — Double consciousness, in med. psychol. a somnambulist condition in which the individual leads, as it were, two lives; recollecting in each condition what occurred in previous conditions of the same character, but knowing nothing of the occurrences in the other. Dunglison. — Attention, Consciousness. See ATTENTION.

Conscript (kon'skript), n. [As if from a L. form conscriptus, dim. of conscientia, conscience; used in contempt.] A worthless, trifling conscience. Bp. Hacket.

Conscript (kon'skrib), v.t. (See CONSCRIPT.) To enroll; to enlist; to levy.

The army (which was not small), was conscripted, and came together at Harflete. Hall.

To make or declare to be sacred with certain ceremonies or rites; to appropriate to sacred uses; to set apart, dedicate, or devote to the service and worship of God; as, to consecrate a church; to consecrate the eucharistic elements.

Thou shalt consecrate Aaron and his sons.

He (Christ) clothed himself in their affections, and they admitted him to their sorrows, and his presence consecrated their joys.

2. To enrol among deities or saints; to canonize.—3. To dedicate with a certain degree of solemnity.

These to his memory

I dedicate, I consecrate with tears—

These idylls.

4. To render venerable; to make respected; to hallow: as, rules or principles consecrated by time.—SYN. To sanctify, devote, dedicate, hallow.

Consecrate (kon'sé-krit), a. Sacred; consecrated; devoted; dedicated. 'Assembled in that consecrate place.' Bacon. 'The imperial seat, to virtue consecrate.' Shak. (Obsolete or poetical.)

Such is the world's great harmony that springs
From union, order, full content of things.

5. In pathol. an agreement or sympathy, by which one affected part of the system affects some distant part. See SYMPATHY.

6. In law, intelligent concurrence in the terms of a contract or agreement, of such a nature as to bind the party consenting. Consent of parties is implied in all legal and binding documents; hence persons legally incapable of giving consent, as idiots, pupils, &c., cannot be parties to a contract. Persons in a state of absolute drunkenness cannot give legal consent, although a lesser degree of intoxication will not afford a sufficient ground for annulling a contract. Consent is null where it proceeds on essential error, or where obtained by fraud, or by force and fear.—Assent, Consent. See under ASSENT.

Consent (kon-sent'), v.t. To grant; to allow; to give assent to.

Interpreters . . . will not consent it to be a true story.

Consentaneous (kon-sen'tá-né-us), a. [L. consentaneus. See CONSENT.] Agreeable; accordant; consistent with; suitable. 'A good law and consentaneous to reason.'

Howell.

Consentaneously (kon-sen'tá-né-us-ly), adv. Agreeably; consistently; suitably. Dr. Carpenter.

Consentaneousness (kon-sen'tá-né-us-nes), n. Agreement; accordance; consistency. Dr. Carpenter.

Consentient (kon-sen'shi-ent), a. [L. consentientis, consentio. See CONSENT.] Agreeing; accordant; tending to the same point; unanimous. 'The consentient judgment of the Church.' Bp. Pearson.

Consentingly (kon-sent-ing-ly), adv. In a consenting or acquiescent manner. Jer. Taylor.

Consequence (kon'sék-kwens), n. [L. consequens, from consequor—con, and sequor, to follow, from root of second.] 1. That which follows from any act, cause, principle, or series of actions; an event or effect produced by some preceding act or cause.

Shun the bitter consequence for know
The day thou eatest thereof, thy sole command
Transgressed, inevitably thou shalt die.

2. Conclusion; inference; deduction.

Can syllogism set things right?
No—majors soon with minors fight:
Or both in friendly concert joined,
The consequence lumps false behind.

3. Connection of cause and effect; consecution.

I must after thee, with this my son;
Such fatal consequence unites us three.

4. Importance; preceded by of; as, this is a matter of consequence, or of some, little, great, no consequence: as applied to persons, importance; extensive influence; distinction; as, a man of great consequence.

Their people are of as little consequence as women and children.

—In consequence of, by means of; as the effect of; by reason of; through.

Consequens (kon'sék-kwens), v.i. To draw inferences; to form deductions.

Moses condescends to such a methodical and school-like way of defining and consequencing.

Consequent (kon'sék-kwent), a. [L. consequens.] 1. Following as the natural effect: with to or on.

The right was consequent to, and built on, an act perfectly personal.

2. Following by necessary inference or rational deduction: with to, as, a proposition consequent to other propositions.

Consequent (kon'sék-kwent), n. 1. Effect; that which follows a cause. [Rare or obsolete.]

They were ill governed, which is always a consequent of ill payment.

2. In logic, (a) that member of a hypothetical proposition which contains the conclusion. See ANTECEDENT. (b) The conclusion of a syllogism.—Consequent of a ratio, in math. is the latter of the two terms of a ratio, or that with which the antecedent is compared. Thus, in the ratio $m:n$, or m to n , n is the consequent and m the antecedent.

Consequential (kon-sék-kwen'shál), a. 1. Following as the effect; produced by the connection of effects with causes.

We sometimes wrangle when we should debate;
A consequential ill which freedom draws;

A bad effect, but from a noble cause.

—Consequential losses or damages, in law, are such losses or damages as arise out of a man's act, for which, according to a fundamental principle in law, he is answerable if he could have avoided them.—2. Having the consequence justly connected with the premises; conclusive. Sir M. Hale.—3. Affecting airs of great self-importance, or characterized by such affectation; conceited; pompous: applied to persons and their manners. 'His stately and consequential pace.' Sir W. Scott.

Consequently (kon-sé-kwen'shi-al-ll), adv. 1. With just deduction of consequences; with right connection of ideas. 'The faculty of writing consequently.' Addison.—2. By consequence; not immediately; eventually. South.—3. In a regular series; in the order of cause and effect.

Were a man a king in his dreams, and a beggar awake, and dreamt consequently, and in continuous unbroken schemes, would he be in reality a king or a beggar? Addison.

4. With assumed importance; with conceit; pompously.

Consequentialness (kon-sé-kwen'shi-al-nes), n. 1. The quality of being consequential or consecutive, as in discourse.—2. Conceit; pomposness; the assumption of dignity or importance.

Consequently (kon-sé-kwen't-ll), adv. By consequence; by necessary connection of effects with their causes; in consequence of something. Comp. THEREFORE.

Consequentness† (kon'sé-kwent-nes) n. Regular connection of propositions, following each other; consecution of discourse. 'The consequentness of the whole body of the doctrine.' Sir K. Digby.

Consertion (kon-sér'shon), n. [L. conserto, consertum, to put together—con, together, and sero, sertum, to bind.] Junction; adaptation. 'Consertion of design, how exquisite!' Young. [Rare.]

Conserveable (kon-sér'-a-bl), a. [See CONSERVE.] That may be kept or preserved from decay or injury.

Conservancy (kon-sér'-an-si), n. [L. conserva, conservatio.] The act of preserving; conservation; preservation. A court of conservancy is held by the Lord-mayor of London for the preservation of the fishery on the Thames.

Conservant (kon-sér'-ant), a. Preserving; having the power or quality of preserving from decay or destruction. [Rare.]

The papacy was either the procreant or conservant cause of all the ecclesiastical controversies in the Christian world. Faulkner.

Conservation (kon-sér-vá'shon), n. [L. conservatio. See CONSERVE.] The act of preserving, guarding, or protecting; preservation from loss, decay, injury, or violation; the keeping of a thing in a safe or entire state; preservation; as, the conservation of bodies from perishing; the conservation of the peace of society; the conservation of privileges.

There may indeed be times of pressing danger, when the conservation of all, demands the sacrifice of the legal rights of a few. Hallam.

—Conservation of energy. See under ENERGY, FORCE.

Conservational (kon-sér-vá'shon-al), a. Tending to preserve; preservative.

Conservatism (kon-sér'-at-izm), n. 1. The practice of preserving what is established. 2. The political principles and opinions maintained by Conservatives.

Conservative (kon-sér'-a-tiv), a. 1. Preservative; having power or tending to preserve in a safe or entire state, or from loss, waste, or injury; said of things. 'The spherical figure the most conservative of all.' Peachment.—2. Respecting old institutions, customs, and the like; dealing tenderly with what is old or established; not given to change merely for the sake of change; said of persons and their principles.

His (Alfred's) character was of that sterling conservative kind which bases itself upon old facts, but accepts new facts as a reason for change. C. H. Pearson.

Hence—3. (a) In a political sense, having a tendency to uphold and preserve entire the institutions of the country, both civil and ecclesiastical; opposed to radical changes or innovations in church and state.

The slow progress which Sweden has made in introducing useful reforms is owing to the conservative spirit of the nobility and the priesthood. Bayard Taylor.

(b) Pertaining to the Conservatives or their principles.

The result of this struggle was highly favourable to the Conservative party. Macaulay.

See the noun.

Conservative (kon-sér'-a-tiv), n. 1. One who aims to preserve from ruin, innovation, injury, or radical change; one who wishes to maintain an institution or form of government in its present state; a preserver; a guardian.

The Holy Spirit is the great conservative of the new life. For. Taylor.

2. One of the political party which sprang up about the time of the passing of the first reform bill; a Tory. The professed object of the Conservatives, as a political body, is to support and preserve by every constitutional means the existing institutions of the country, both ecclesiastical and civil; and to oppose such measures and changes as they believe have a tendency either to destroy or to impair these institutions.

We see that if M. Dumont had died in 1799, he would have died, to use the new cant word, a decided 'conservative.' Macaulay.

Conservativeness (kon-sér'-a-tiv-nes), n. Tendency to preserve; conservatism.

Conservatoire (kon-sár'-va-twar), n. [Fr. from It. conservatorio.] A name given to an establishment for promoting the study of any special branch. The first conservatoire was established at Naples in 1537 for the study of music and declamation; others followed in Italy, France, Germany, and Belgium. Originally these conservatoires were intended for foundlings, orphans, and poor children, and the pupils were boarded and clothed and instructed gratuitously. There are also conservatoires for instructions in the mechanical arts.

Conservator (kon-sér-vá'tér or kon'sér-vá'tér), n. 1. A preserver; one who preserves from injury or violation; specifically, an officer who has the charge of preserving the public peace, as a judge, sheriff, or the like; also, an officer who has the charge of preserving the rights and privileges of a city, corporation, or community, as in Catholic universities. It is a word of extensive application.—2. In Connecticut, a person appointed to superintend idiots, lunatics, &c., manage their property, and preserve it from waste.—Conservators of the peace, officers who, by the common law of England, were appointed for the preservation of the public peace, before the institution of justices of the peace. Their powers were far inferior to those of modern justices of the peace.

8. Recompense for trouble, service rendered, and the like; remuneration. [Colloq.]

The gentleman shall not have the trouble to put on a fire. . . I'll put it on myself, for a consideration. Sir W. Scott.

9. In law, the reason which moves a contracting party to enter into an agreement; the material cause of a contract; the price or motive of a stipulation. In all contracts each party gives something in exchange for what he receives. A contract is an agreement upon sufficient consideration. This consideration is express or implied; express, when the thing to be given or done is specified; implied, when no specific consideration is agreed upon, but justice requires it and the law implies it; as, when a man labours for another without stipulating for wages the law infers that he shall receive a reasonable consideration. A good consideration is that of blood or natural love; a valuable consideration is such as money, marriage, &c. Hence a consideration is an equivalent or recompense; that which is given as of equal estimated value with that which is received. In Scots law, when value in money or goods or services has been given in return for a deed granted, the consideration is said to be onerous; when a deed is granted without value, and from mere love and favour to the grantee, the consideration is termed gratuitous. — In consideration of, in respect or regard of; in return for.

The sovereign is bound to protect his subjects, in consideration of their allegiance to him. Brougham.

Consolidated (kon-sol-id-āt-ed), p. or a. Made solid, hard, or compact; united.—Consolidated funds. In 1816 the exchequers of Great Britain and Ireland, which had previously been kept separate, were by act of parliament consolidated into one, and an act was at the same time passed consolidating certain portions of the joint revenue of Great Britain and Ireland into one fund, hence called the consolidated fund, and providing for its indiscriminate application to the payment of the public debts, civil lists, and other specified expenses of both kingdoms.

Consolidating (kon-sol-id-āt-ing), n. Act of making solid; uniting.—Consolidating of actions, in law, the joining of two or more actions together by a court or a judge. This is done when two or more actions are brought by the same plaintiff, at the same time, against the same defendant, for cause of action which might have been joined in the same action, the court or the judge deeming the proceedings to be oppressive.

Consolidation (kon-sol-id-ā'shon), n. 1. The act of making or process of becoming solid; the act of forming into a firm compact mass, body, or system.

The consolidation of the marble did not fall out at random. Woodford.

2. The act of uniting of several particulars, details, or parts into one body or a whole; as, a consolidation of the funds.

The gradual establishment of law by the consolidation of custom in the formation of something fixed in the midst of things that are changing. H. Spencer.

3.† The act of confirming or ratifying; confirmation, ratification.

He first offered a league to Henry VII., and for consolidation thereof his daughter Margaret. Lord Herbert of Cheshbury.

4. In civil law, the uniting the possession or profit of land with the property.—5. In Scots feudal law, the reunion of the property with the superiority, after they have been feudally disjoined.—Consolidation acts, the name given to acts of parliament which embody such clauses as are common to all the particular acts affecting any class of undertakings, in order to save these clauses being repeated in each individual act. Thus there are The Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, The Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, The Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, &c.

Consolidative (kon-sol-id-āt-iv), a. Tending to consolidate, healing.

Consoling (kon-sōl-ing), a. Adapted to console or comfort, as, consoling news.

Consols (kon'sols), n. pl. [Contr. for consolidated annuities.] A term used to denote a considerable portion of the public debt of this kingdom, more correctly known as the three per cent. consolidated annuities. There is a similar description of stock called the 'reduced three,' or three per cent.

Consomme (kon-som-mā), n. [Fr., from L. consumo, to use up—con, intens., and sumo, to take.] In cookery, a soup or broth made by boiling meat with vegetables to a jelly, jelly-broth.

Consonance, Consonancy (kon'sō-nāns, kon'sō-nān-sē), n. [Fr. consonance, from L. consonantia, consonans, from consono, to sound together—con, and sono, to sound. See ROUND.] 1. Accord or agreement of sounds. In music, consonance is an accord of sounds which produces an agreeable sensation in the ear, as the third, fifth, and octave. Consonances having two forms (major and minor), as the third and sixth, are called perfect; those having only one form, as the fifth and octave, are called perfect. See CONCORD.

The two principal consonances that most ravish the ear are, by the consent of all nature, the fifth and the octave. Sir H. Wotton.

2. Agreement, accord; congruity; consistency; agreeableness; suitableness; as, the consonance of opinions among judges, the consonance of a ritual to the Scriptures. 'Winds and waters flow'd in consonance.' Thomson.

I have set down this to show the perfect consonance of our persecuted church to Scripture. Hammond.

3. Agreement, accord, consistency, union, harmony, congruity, suitableness.

CONSONANT (kon-sō-nant), a. 1. Agreeing, according; congruous, consistent; followed generally by to, sometimes by with, as, this rule is consonant to Scripture and reason.

That where much is given there shall be much required is a thing consonant with natural equity. Dr H. More.

2. In music, composed of consonances, as, consonant intervals.—3. Having like sounds.

Our birds hold agreements and enforcing of consonant words and syllables one upon the other to be the greatest elegance. Hemelt.

4. Consisting of consonants or of many consonants, consonantal.

No Russian whose dissonant consonant name, Almost shatters to fragments the trumpet of fame. Alford.

CONSONANT (kon-sō-nant), a. A letter, so named because it is considered as being sounded only in connection with a vowel. But some consonants have no sound even when united with a vowel, and others have a very imperfect sound. The consonants are better called articulations, as they are the names given to the several closings or junctions of the organs of speech, which precede and follow the openings of the organs with which the vowels are uttered. These closings are either perfect, and wholly intercept the voice, as in the syllables *ek, ep, et, or imperfect, and admitting some slight sound, as in en, em. Hence some articulations are called mutes, and others semi-vowels or liquids. The consonants begin or end syllables, and their use is to determine the manner of beginning or ending the vocal sounds. These closings or configurations of the organs being various, serve to diversify the syllables, as in uttering be, da, pa, or ab, ad, ap; and although b and p may be considered as representing no sounds at all, yet they so modify the utterance of ab, ap, or ba, pa, that the slight difference between these articulations may be perceived as far as the human voice can be distinctly heard. [For distinction between vowel and consonant see extract under VOWEL.]*

Consonants and their sounds are divided into liquids, mutes, and fricatives. The liquids are r, l, m, n, and the sound of ng in sing. They are so called because they flow on continuously, and are therefore more like vowels than consonants. The mutes are p, t, k, c, and the fricatives are f, v, s, z, x, h, g.

They are the mo concur uttered compar the five voice of the stop a certain distinct uttered da, da, it terrible rough, a sh dash (he is called his that express It is far seemed CONSONANTIAL, CONSONANTIAL (kon-sō-nant-ēl, kon-sō-nant-ēl), a. Relating to or partaking of the nature of a consonant.

Consonantial bases, or of the vocalic, those which end in n (vel), a vowel of a decided consonantial quality, are most apt to preserve the inflections in their unaltered form. Lambert's Eng.

Constable (kon-sta-bl), n. [O Fr. and Fr. constable, from L. comes stabuli, count of the stable.] 1. An officer of high rank in several of the medieval monarchies.—The Lord High Constable of England was originally the seventh officer of the crown. He had the care of the common peace, in deeds of arms, and matters of war, being a judge of the court of chivalry, also called the court of honour. To this officer, and to the earl-marshal, belonged the guardianship of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combat and blasphemous in the realm. The power of this officer was so great, and so improperly used, that it was shirked by the 12th Richard II., and was afterwards forfeited in the person of Edward Stafford, duke of Buckingham, in 1551. It has never been granted to any person since that time, except for a time or on a particular occasion. Lord High Constable of Scotland. The office of Lord High Constable of Scotland is one of great antiquity and dignity. He had formerly the command of the king's army while in the field, in the absence of the king. He was likewise judge of all crimes or offences committed within 4 miles of the king's person, or within the same distance of the parliament or of the privy-council, or of any general convention of the estates of the kingdom. The office is hereditary in the noble family of Errol, and is expressly reserved in the treaty of union.—Constable of France. The first officer of the kings of France, and till a later period the first military officer of the crown, who rose gradually till he became commander-in-chief of the army and the highest judge in all questions of chivalry and honour. This office was suppressed in 1807 on the death of the Constable La Roche-Aymon. Napoleon re-established it in favour of the Prince of Wagram, but he had no successor.—Constable of a castle was the keeper or governor of a castle belonging to the king or a great noble. These offices were often hereditary, thus there were constables or hereditary keepers of the Tower, of Normandy, and of the castles of Windsor, Dover, &c.—2. An officer of the peace. Constables, in the usual acceptation of the term at the present day, are of two kinds, viz. constables of hundreds, who are still called high constables; and constables of wards or townships, who are called either petty constables or riding-constables. High constables are now appointed either at quarter-sessions or by the justice, of the hundred out of sessions, and petty constables are usually sworn into the office at quarter-sessions for each parish upon presentation of the vestry. The duties of the high constable, respecting the preservation of the peace, are now merely nominal, but he is still of use to represent the hundred in certain legal actions, and to perform certain ministerial offices connected with the administration of justice.—A petty constable has authority to arrest all persons who commit an offence, assault, or breach of the peace in his presence, and keep them in safe custody until they can be brought before a magistrate, and he is also authorized to execute all such warrants as are legal and committed to his hands by competent authorities. In London, the police force are appointed by direction of the secretary of state, and sworn in as constables by the commissioners. Two or more justices of the peace, upon information that disturbances exist or are apprehended, are authorized to appoint special constables, and in boroughs, the magistrates are authorized to swear in as many inhabitants as they think fit to act as special constables when called upon. By 1 and 2 Vict. c. 17, 18, and other statutes, a county constable was constituted both in England and Scotland. In the United States, constables are town or city officers of the peace, with powers similar to those possessed by the constables in Great Britain. They are invested also with powers to execute civil as well as criminal processes, and to levy executions. In New England, they are elected by the inhabitants of towns in legal meetings.—To out-run the constable, (a) to escape from the subject in dispute when one's arguments are exhausted. Idiom. (b) To live beyond one's means. In this latter sense written also to outrun the constable. [Colloq.]

shards. A quantity which, upon one supposition, would remain constant, becomes variable by the introduction of another supposition. Thus, taking into account the earth's attraction only the longitude of the moon's node is constant, but by the attraction of the sun and planets its place is slowly changed. In this case one of the constants is said to vary. (b) In physics, that which remains unchanged or invariable. Thus, a quantity, force, law, &c., when it continues unchanged, is called a constant. Constantia (kon-stan-shi-a), n. A kind of wine, both white and red, from the farms around Constantia, Cape of Good Hope, renowned as the best liquor wine after Tokay. The vines were originally brought from Shiraz in Persia.

Contagion (kon-tä'jon), n. [L. contagio, from the root of contingo, tango, primarily tango, to touch.] 1. Lit. a touch or touching. Hence, the communication of a disease by contact, direct or indirect. Properly speaking, contagion is the communication of disease strictly by contact, while infection is a communication either by actual contact or by the miasmata or germs which one body gives out and the other receives. This distinction, however, is frequently disregarded, the two words being confounded.—2. That excessively subtle matter, in many cases believed to be germs of an exaceringly minute organism, which proceeds from a diseased person or body, and communicates the disease to another person; as in cases of small-pox, scarlet and other fevers, &c. This contagion may proceed from the breath of the diseased, from the perspiration, or from other excretions.—3. That which communicates evil from one to another; infection; that which propagates mischief; as, the contagion of vice or of evil example. 'The scandal and contagion of example.' Bp. Gauden.—4. Pestilential influence; venomous exhalations.

Will he steal out of his wholesome bed

Continental (kon-ti-nent'al), a. 1. Pertaining or relating to a continent; specifically, of or belonging to the continent of Europe, as distinguished from the adjacent islands, especially Great Britain.—2. In Amer. hist. pertaining to the United States; as, continental money, money belonging to the confederated colonies collectively, in distinction from what pertains to the separate states: a word much used during the war of Independence.

The army before Boston was designated as the continental army, in contradistinction to that under General Gage, which was called the ministerial army. W. Irving.

—Continental system, in modern hist. the celebrated plan of the Emperor Napoleon for excluding the merchandise of England from all parts of the Continent. It was commenced by the decree of Berlin, issued November 21, 1806, which declared the British islands in a state of blockade, and made prisoners of war all Englishmen found in the territories occupied by France and her allies. The blockade, however, was far from complete, and means were soon contrived for its evasion.

Continental (kon-ti-nent'al), n. 1. A native or inhabitant of a continent, specifically of the continent of Europe.—2. In Amer. hist. a soldier belonging to the army of the confederate states in the war of Independence.

To these may be added continuative: as, Rome remains to this day; which includes at least two propositions, viz. Rome was and Rome is. Watts.

2. In gram. a word that continues the connection between clauses or sentences; a conjunction. [In both uses rare or obsolete.]

Continuatives consolidate sentences into one continuous whole. Harris.

Continuative (kon-tin-'u-ät-iv), a. Continuing. Watt. [Rare.]

Continuator (kon-tin-'u-ät-ör), n. One who, or that which, continues; as, the continuator of an unfinished history.

Continue (kon-tin-'u), v. t. pret. & pp. continuat; ppr. continuing. [L. continuo (of space), to make in a line with, carry on, connect; (of time), to keep on, continue, from continuus, unbroken, continuous—con, together, and teneo, to hold.] 1. To remain in a state or place; to abide for any time indefinitely.

The multitude continue with me now three days and have nothing to eat. Mat. xv. 32.

2. To last; to be durable; to endure; to be permanent.

Thy kingdom shall not continue. 1 Sam. xiii. 14.

3. To persevere; to be steadfast or constant in any course.

If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed. Jn. viii. 31.

Continue (kon-tin-'u), v. t. 1. To protract; not to cease from or to terminate.

O continue thy loving-kindness to them that know thee. Ps. cxlvi. 10.

2. To extend from one thing to another; to produce or draw out in length; as, continue the line from A to B; let the line be continued to the boundary.—3. To persevere in; not to cease to do or use; as, to continue the same diet.

You know how to make yourself happy by only continuing such a life as you have been long accustomed to lead. Pope.

4. † To hold to or unite.

The navel continues the infant to its mother. Sir T. Browne.

5. To suffer or cause to remain as before; as, to continue judges in their posts. Specifically—6. † To suffer to live.

Barnardine must die this afternoon: And how shall we continue Claudio. Shak.

Continued (kon-tin-'üd), p. and a. 1. Drawn out; protracted; produced; extended in length; extended without interruption.—

2. Extended in time without intermission; proceeding without cessation; unceasing; as, a continued fever, which abates but never entirely intermits.—Continued or continual proportionals, a series of three or more quantities compared together, so that the ratio is the same between every two adjacent terms, viz. between the first and second; the second and third; the third and fourth, &c., as 1, 2, 4, 8, 16, &c., where the terms continually increase in a double ratio. Such quantities are also said to be in continued proportion, and a series of continued proportions is otherwise called a progression.—Continued base or base, in music, the figured base of a score continued through the whole piece. The term is only to be found in old music.—Continued fractions, in arith. a species of fractions which have acquired great value by their application to the solution of numerical equations and of problems in the indeterminate analysis. A continued fraction is one whose denominator is an integer with a fraction, which latter fraction has for its denominator an narrow, lessen, condense, reduce, confine, incur.

Contract (kon-trakt'), v. i. 1. To be drawn together; to be reduced in compass; to become shorter or narrower; to shrink. 'Years contracting to a moment.' Wordsworth. 2. To bargain; to make a mutual agreement as between two or more persons; as, to contract for a load of flour; to contract to carry the mail.—3. To bind one's self by promise of marriage.

Although the young folks can contract against their parents' will, yet they can be hindered from possession. Jer. Taylor.

Contract (kon-trakt'), pp. Contracted; affianced; betrothed.

First was he contract to Lady Lucy;

Your mother lives a witness to that vow. Shak.

Contract (kon-trakt'), n. 1. An agreement or covenant between two or more persons, in which each party binds himself to do or forbear some act, and each requires a right to what the other promises; a mutual promise upon lawful consideration or cause which binds the parties to a performance; a bargain; a compact. Contracts are executory or executed.

Of those systems the most famous is that which is usually called the doctrine of the 'original contract' or 'compact,' which supposes all the citizens to have at first joined in forming a community, and to have made a contract, or agreement, or treaty, with each other, and with those whom they chose for rulers. Brougham.

2. The act by which a man and woman are betrothed each to the other.

Touch'd you the bastardy of Edward's children?
I did, with his contract with Lady Lucy. Shak.

3. The writing which contains the agreement of parties with the terms and conditions, and which serves as a proof of the obligation. In law contracts are divided into three classes:—(a) Contracts of record, such as judgments, recognizances, and statutes of staple; (b) Specialties, which are under seal, such as deeds and bonds; (c) Simple contracts, or contracts by parole. Both verbal and written contracts are included in the class of verbal contracts.—Nominate contracts, in Scots law, are loan, commodate, deposit, pledge, sale, permutation, location, society, and mandate. Contracts not distinguished by special names are termed innominate, all of which are obligatory on the contracting parties from their date.—Covenant, NANT. See under COVENANT.—SYN. Covenant, agreement, compact, stipulation, bargain, arrangement, obligation.

Contracted (kon-trakt'ed), p. and a. 1. Drawn together, or into a shorter or narrower compass; shrunk. 'To him the angel with contracted brow.' Milton. 2. Bargained for; betrothed. 'The contracted peace.' Shak.

Inquire me out contracted bachelors. Shak.

3. Incurred; as, a debt improperly contracted.—4. Narrow; mean; selfish; as, a man of a contracted soul or mind.—Contracted vein, in hydraulics, a term denoting the diminution which takes place in the diameter of a stream of water issuing from a vessel at a short distance from the discharging aperture owing to the particles nearest the periphery experiencing greater attrition than the rest, and being thus retarded.

Contractedly (kon-trakt'ed-ly), adv. In a contracted manner.

Contractedness (kon-trakt'ed-ness), n. 1. The state of being contracted.—2. Narrowness; meanness; excessive selfishness.

Contractibility (kon-trakt'i-bil'i-ti), n. Possibility of being contracted; quality of suffering contraction; as, the contractibility and dilatibility of air.

Contractible (kon-trakt'i-bl), a. Capable of contraction. 'Small air-bladders dilatible and contractible.' Arbutnot.

Contractibleness (kon-trakt'i-bl-ness), n. The quality of suffering contraction; contractibility.

Contractile (kon-trakt'il), a. Tending to contract; having the power of shortening or of drawing into smaller dimensions. 'The heart's contractile force.' Brookes.

Contractility (kon-trakt-il'i-ti), n. 1. The inherent quality or force by which bodies shrink or contract. More specifically—2. In physiol. that vital property which gives to certain parts the power of contracting. This power may be either voluntary, that is, dependent on the action of the brain, or involuntary. The muscles of locomotion are endowed with voluntary contractility, those of the stomach, viscera, heart, &c., with involuntary contractility. This term is sometimes applied to the property possessed by tissues of contracting on the application of a stimulus, but for the sake of precision it is better designated irritability.

Contracting (kon-trakt'ing), a. Making or having made a contract or treaty; stipulating; as, the contracting parties to a league.

Contraction (kon-trakt'shon), n. [L. contractio.] 1. The act of drawing together or shrinking; the act of shortening, narrowing, or lessening extent or dimensions by causing the parts of a body to approach nearer to each other; the state of being contracted.

Oil of vitriol will throw the stomach into involuntary contractions. Arbutnot.

The contraction of the heart is called systole. Gray. Some things induce a contraction of the nerves. Bacon.

2. The act of shortening, abridging, or reducing within a narrower compass by any means; as, the poem would be improved by contractions.—3. An abbreviation employed with the view of saving labour in writing, and also in former times with the view of saving parchment in extending MS. copies of works, deeds, &c. Contraction takes place in several modes, as by elision or suspension; writing a smaller letter above the word contracted; running two or more letters into one character; by symbols representing syllables or words; by initial letters; thus: recd. for received; q'm for quam; Mr. for Master; & for et; p for per; S. P. Q. R. for Senatus populusque Romanus. When the contraction consists of the initial syllable or syllables of a word, as ult. for ultimo, plenipo. for plenipotentiary, it is more correctly termed an abbreviation. Sometimes the contraction becomes a substantive word in the language, as procy for procuracy, proctor for procurator, sheriff for shire-reeve, Fr. blamer for blasphemer.—4. In gram. the shortening of a word by the omission of one or more letters or syllables; as, can't for can not; procy for procuracy; control for contro-rolle.—5. † A contract; marriage contract.

Such an act . . . makes marriage vows

As false as dicers' oaths; O, such a deed

As from the body of contraction plucks

The very soul. Shak.

6. In surg. an abnormal and permanent alteration in the relative position and forms of parts, arising from various causes, as in ankylosis, distortion, club-foot, wry-neck, &c.—7. In physics, a decrease of volume, bulk, or dimensions, the usual effect of a diminution of heat. All bodies expand by the application of heat, and contract their dimensions when heat is withdrawn.—Abbreviation, Contraction. See under ABBREVIATION.

Contractive (kon-trakt'iv), a. Tending to contract.

The heart, as said, from its contractive cave,

On the left side ejects the bounding wave. Richman.

Contractor (kon-trakt'er), n. 1. One who contracts; one of the parties to a bargain; one who covenants to do anything for another.

All matches are dangerous and inconvenient where the contractors are not equals. L'Estrange.

Specifically—2. One who contracts or covenants, as with a government or other public body, to furnish provisions, clothing, or other supplies, or to perform any work or service, at a certain price or rate.

Contra-dance (kon-tra-dans), n. [Fr. contredanse.] A dance in which the partners are arranged face to face or in opposite lines. [Erroneous for Country-dance.]

Contradict (kon-tra-dikt'), v. t. [L. contradico—contra, and dico, to speak.] 1. To oppose by words; to assert the contrary to what has been asserted, or to deny what has been affirmed.

It is not lawful to contradict a point of history known to all the world. Drayden.

The Jews . . . spake against those things which were spoken by Paul, contradicting and blaspheming. Acts xiii. 45.

2. To oppose; to be directly contrary to.

No truth can contradict another truth. Hosker.

SYN. To oppose, gainsay, deny, resist, impugn, correct, rectify, retract, recall, recant.

Contradictable (kon-tra-dikt'a-bl), a. That may be contradicted; deniable; disputable.

Contradictor (kon-tra-dikt'er), n. One who contradicts or denies; an opposer.

Contradiction (kon-tra-dik'shon), n. [L. contradictio.] 1. An assertion of the contrary to what has been said or affirmed; denial; contrary declaration.—2. Opposition, whether by words, reproaches, or attempts to defeat.

Consider him that endureth such contradiction of sinners against himself. Heb. xii. 3.

3. Direct opposition or repugnancy; inconsistency with itself; incongruity or contrariety of things, words, thoughts, or propositions; as, these theorems involve a contradiction.

It is to perceive truth, we thereby perceive what is false in contradiction to it. Gray.

4. Fig. the person who, or thing that, contradicts or is inconsistent with him, her, or itself.

Woman's at best a contradiction still. Pope.

—Principle of contradiction, the principle or axiom that a thing cannot be and not be at the same time, or that a thing must either be or not be, or that the same attribute cannot at the same time be affirmed and denied of the same subject. It is one and indivisible, but develops itself in three specific forms, which have been called the three logical axioms. First, 'A is A.' Second, 'A is not A.' Third, 'Everything is either A or Not-A.' This last is sometimes called the law of excluded middle. Aristotle lays down this principle as the basis of all logic and of all metaphysics.

Contradictional (kon-tra-dik'shon-al), a. Inconsistent.

Contradictious (kon-tra-dik'shus), a. 1. Filled with contradictions; opposite; inconsistent. 'Contradictious inconsistencies.' Dr. H. More.—2. Inclined to contradict; disposed to deny or cavil. [In both uses rare or obsolete.]

Bondet was argumentative, contradictions, and irascible. Sp. of Kildala's Narrative.

Contradictiousness (kon-tra-dik'shus-ness), n. 1. Inconsistency; contrariety to itself.—2. Disposition to contradict or cavil. [In both uses rare.]

Contradictive (kon-tra-dikt'iv), a. Containing contradiction; contradictory; inconsistent.

Though faith be set on a height beyond our human perspicience, I can believe it rather super-elevated than contradictory to our reason. Fetham.

Contradictively (kon-tra-dikt'iv-ly), adv. By contradiction.

Contradictorily (kon-tra-dikt'or-i-ly), adv. In a contradictory manner; in a manner inconsistent with itself or opposite to others.

Contradictoriness (kon-tra-dikt'or-i-ness), n. Direct opposition; contrariety in assertion or effect.

Contradictorious (kon-tra-dikt'or-i-us), a. Contradictory. 'A contradictorious humour.' State Trials, 1649.

Contradictoriously (kon-tra-dikt'or-i-us-ly), adv. Contradictorily.

Contradictory (kon-tra-dikt'or-i), a. 1. Affirming the contrary; implying a denial of what has been asserted; as, contradictory assertions.—2. Inconsistent; opposite; contrary; as, contradictory schemes. 'Schemes absurd and contradictory to common sense.' Addison.—Contradictory propositions, n. In logic, propositions which, having the same terms, differ in quantity and quality. See CONTRARY.

Contradictory (kon-tra-dikt'or-i), n. A proposition which denies or opposes another in all its terms; contrariety; inconsistency.

It is common with princes to will contradictory things. Racine.

Contradistinct (kon-tra-dis-tinkt'), a. Distinguished by opposite qualities. 'A contradistinct term.' Goodwin. [Rare.]

Contradistinction (kon-tra-dis-tinkt'shon), n. [L. contra and E. distinction.] Distinction by opposite qualities.

We speak of sins of infamy, in contradistinction to those of presumption. South.

Contradistinctive (kon-tra-dis-tinkt'iv), a. 1. Having the quality of, or characterized by, contradistinction; opposite in qualities. 2. Distinguished by opposites. Harrie.

Contradistinctively (kon-tra-dis-tinkt'iv-ly), adv. A mark of contradistinction. Harrie.

Contradistinguish (kon-tra-dis-ting'ish), v. t. [L. contra and E. distinguish.] To distinguish not merely by differential but by opposite qualities.

These are our complex ideas of soul and body, as contradicting each other. Locke.

Contra-essure (kon-tra-es'shür), n. [L. contra and E. fissure.] In surg. a fissure or fracture in the cranium, on the side opposite to that which received the blow, or at some distance from it.

Contra-harmonical Proportion (kon-tra-här-mon'ik-al prö-pör'shon), n. In math.

that relation between three terms in which the difference between the first and second is to the difference between the second and third as the third is to the first. See HARMONICAL.

Contrahent (kon'tra-hent), a. [See CONTRACT.] Contracting; covenanting; agreeing. A common word in diplomatic documents of the time of Henry VIII.

Contrahent (kon'tra-hent), n. One who enters into a contract, covenant, or agreement.

Between the king's highness, the emperor, and the French king, as princes contrahentes. Sirys.

Contraindicant (kon-tra-in'di-kant), n. [L. contra, against, and indicans, indicating, pp. of indico, to point out. See INDICATE, INDEX.] A symptom that forbids to treat a subject or matter, as a disease, in the usual way. Burke.

Contraindication (kon-tra-in'di-kat), v.t. or i. pret. & pp. contraindicated, ppr. contraindicating. [L. contra and E. indicare.] To indicate in a direction opposite to what is usual or what might be expected. Specifically, in med. to indicate some method of cure contrary to that which the general tenor of the disease requires; or to forbid that to be done which the main scope of the malady points out. 'Contraindicating symptoms must be observed.' Harvey.

Contraindication (kon-tra-in'di-ka'shon), n. In med. an indication from some peculiar symptom or fact that forbids the method of cure which the main symptoms or nature of the disease requires. Arbuthnot.

Contraire (kon'trâr), v.t. [Fr. contrairer.] To cross; to thwart; to resist; to withstand. Spenser.

Contrajerva (kon-tra-jér'va), n. See CONTRAYEVA.

Contralto (kon-tral'tô), n. [It.] 1. In music, the highest voice of a male adult, or the lowest of a woman or a boy, called also the Alto, or when possessed by a man Countertenor. It is next below the treble and above the tenor, its easy range being from tenor G to treble C.—2. The person who sings with this voice; as, she is a splendid contralto.

Contralto (kon-tral'tô), a. Pertaining to, or possessed of the quality of, contralto; as, a contralto voice.

Contramure (kon'tra-mûr), n. An out wall. See COUNTERMURE.

Contrapose (kon-tra-pôz), v.t. To set in opposition.

Contraposition (kon'tra-pô-zî'shon), n. [L. contra and E. position.] A placing over against; opposite position. In logic, conversion, in particular negative propositions, effected by separating the word not from the copula and attaching it to the predicate; without which the change would in English be impracticable.

But it has been already shown that the conversion by 'contraposition' (by 'negation') will enable us to reduce these two moods, ostensively. Whately.

Contrapuntal (kon-tra-punt'al), a. Pertaining to counterpoint.

Contrapuntist (kon-tra-punt'ist), n. One skilled in counterpoint.

Contraregularity (kon-tra-rê-gû-lar'i-ti), n. [L. contra and E. regularity.] Contrariety to rule or to regularity. Norris. [Rare or obsolete.]

Contraremonstrant (kon'tra-rê-mon'strant), n. One who remonstrates in opposition or answer to a remonstrant.

They did the synod wrong to make this distinction of contra-remonstrants and remonstrants. Hales.

Contrariant (kon-trâ-ri-ant), a. [Fr., from contrary, to contradict or run counter.] Contradictory; opposite; inconsistent. 'Without one hostile or contrariant prepossession.' Southey. [Rare.]

Contrariantly (kon-trâ-ri-ant-li), adv. Contrarily. Coleridge. [Rare.]

Contraria, Contrary (kon-trâ-ri), v.t. [Fr.] [O.E. and Sc.] To contradict.

In all the court he was there wif ne maid
Ne widewe, that contrariad that he said. Chaucer.

Contrariant (kon-trâ-ri-ant), n. In English hist. the name given to Thomas, earl of Lancaster, and the barons who took part with him against King Edward II., because in respect of their great power it was not fit to call them rebels or traitors.

Contraries (kon'tra-ri), n. pl. [See CON-

TRARY.] In logic, propositions which destroy each other, but of which the falsehood of one does not establish the truth of the other.

If two universals differ in quality, they are contraries; as, every vine is a tree, no vine is a tree. These can never be both true together, but they may be both false. Walt.

Contrariety (kon-tra-ri-é-ti), n. [L. contrarius, See CONTRARY.] 1. The state or quality of being contrary; opposition in fact, essence, quality, or principle; repugnance. It principally failed by contrariety of weather at sea. Sir H. Waller.

Their religion had more than negative contrariety to virtue. Dr. H. More.

There is a contrariety between these things that conscience inclines to, and those that entertain the senses. South.

2. Inconsistency; quality or position destructive of its opposite.

How can these contrarieties agree? Shak.

3. In metaph. one of the associating principles of the mind. According to this principle great cold is apt to make us think of heat; hunger and thirst of eating and drinking.—SYN. Inconsistency, discrepancy, repugnance.

Contrarily (kon'tra-ri-li), adv. In an opposite manner; in opposition; on the other side; in opposite ways.

Contrariness (kon'tra-ri-nes), n. Contrariety; opposition.

Contrarions (kon-trâ-ri-us), a. Contrary; opposite; repugnant. [Rare.]

She flew contrarions in the face of God
With bat-wings of her vices. E. B. Browning.

Contrariouly (kon-trâ-ri-us-li), adv. Contrarily; oppositely. [Rare.]

Contrariwise (kon'tra-ri-wis), adv. [Contrary, and wise, manner.] On the contrary; oppositely; on the other hand.

Not rendering evil for evil, nor railing for railing;
but contrariwise, blessing. 1 Pet. iii. 9.

Contra-rotation (kon'tra-rô-tâ'shon), n. [L. contra, against, and E. rotation (which see).] Circular motion in a direction contrary to some other circular motion.

Contrary (kon'tra-ri), a. [L. contrarius, from contra, against; Fr. contraire.] 1. Opposite; adverse; moving against or in an opposite direction; as, contrary winds.

We have lost our labour, they have gone a contrary way. Shak.

2. Opposite; contradictory; not merely different, but inconsistent or repugnant.

The flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh; and these are contrary, the one to the other. Gal. v. 17.

3. Given to contradiction or resistance; self-willed; perverse; froward; as, a contrary child. [Colloq.]—4. Different. 'Hath appointed them contrary places.' Shak. [Rare.]

5. Opposite or opposed to what is right; wrong. 'Slippers which his nimble haste had falsely thrust upon contrary feet.' Swift. [Rare.]—6. In her. noting things that are opposed or in opposition to one another.

In this use written also Contra. [This adjective, in many phrases, is to be treated grammatically as an adverb, or as an adjective referring to a sentence or affirmation; as, this happened contrary to my expectations.

The word here really belongs to the affirmation or fact declared, this happened; for contrary does not, like an adverb, express the manner of happening, but that the fact itself was contrary to my expectation. According, agreeable, pursuant, antecedent, prior, anterior, &c., are often used in like manner.]—Contrary and contradictory, in logic, (a) two propositions are contrary when the one denies every possible case of the other; they are contradictory when, one being universal, the other denies some only of the things asserted in the first. (b) Two terms are contrary which, while belonging to the same class or category, are the most widely different of all that belong to the class; as, good, bad; wise, foolish; white, black.—SYN. Adverse, repugnant, hostile, inimical, discordant, inconsistent.

Contrary (kon'tra-ri), n. 1. A thing that is contrary or of opposite qualities.

No contraries hold more antipathy
Than I and such a knave. Shak.

2. A proposition contrary to another, or a fact contrary to what is alleged; as, this is stated to be a fact, but I will endeavour to show the contrary. Specifically—3. In logic, see CONTRARIES.—4. An adversary. 'Whether he or thou ale his contrary.' Chaucer.—On the contrary, in opposition; on the other side.—To the contrary, to an opposite purpose or fact; as, he said it was just, but I told him to the contrary.

They did it, not for want of instruction to the contrary. Stillingfleet.

Contrary (kon'tra-ri), v.t. [Fr. contrarier.] To contradict or oppose. 'You must contrary me.' Shak.

Contrary-minded (kon'tra-ri-mind-ed), a. Of a different mind or opinion.

Contrast (kon'trast), v.t. [Fr. contraster, from L. contra, opposite, and stare, to stand.] 1. To set in opposition two or more objects of a like kind, with a view to show the difference or dissimilitude, and to manifest the superior excellence of the one by the inferiority of the other, or to exhibit the excellence of the one and the defects of the other in a more striking view; as, to contrast two pictures or statues. 'The generosity of one person contrasted with the meanness of another.' Crabb.

To contrast the goodness of God with our rebellion, will tend to make us humble and thankful. Clark.

2. To exhibit differences or dissimilitude in painting and sculpture, by position or attitude, either of the whole figure or of its members; or to show to advantage by opposition or difference of position.

The figures must not be all on one side, but must contrast each other by their several positions. Dryden.

Contrast (kon'trast), v.i. To stand in contrast or opposition to.

The joints which divide the sandstone contrast finely with the divisional planes which separate the basalt into pillars. Lytell.

Contrast (kon'trast), n. Opposition or dissimilitude of objects, by which the one contributes to the visibility or effect of the other; the placing together in view or in juxtaposition things belonging to the same category or class but widely differing from each other, in order to render the difference more vividly marked; comparison by contrariety of qualities; opposition of thing or qualities. 'The contrasts and resemblances of the seasons.' Whewell.

Contrast is applicable to things of a similar kind. We never speak of a contrast between a man and a mountain, or between a dog and a tree; but we observe the contrast between an oak and a shrub, and between a palace and a cottage. Webster.

What a contrast between modesty and impudence, or between a well-bred man and a clown! Orliva.

2. In the fine arts, opposition of varied forms in sculpture or colours in painting, which by such juxtaposition more vividly express each other's peculiarities. Fairholt.

Contra-stimulant (kon-tra-stim'û-lant), n. In med. a medicine which tends to counteract the effect of a stimulant.

Contrate (kon'trit), a. [L. contra, against, contrary.] Having cogs or teeth placed contrary to those of common wheels, or projecting parallel to the axis: used chiefly of the wheels in clockwork.

Contra-tenor, Contratenore (kon'tra-tên-er, kon'tra-tâ-nô-râ), n. In music, a middle part between the tenor and treble; contralto; counter-tenor.

Contrate-wheel (kon'trat-whêl), n. A wheel having the teeth projecting perpendicularly to the plane of the wheel. See CONTRATE.

Contravallation, Countervallation (kon'tra-val-lâ'shon, kon'tér-val-lâ'shon), n. [Fr. contravallation, from L. contra, against, and vallum, a rampart.] In fort. a chain of redoubts and breastworks raised by the besiegers about a fortress, either unconnected or united by a parapet, to prevent sorties of the garrison.

Contravene (kon-tra-vên), v.t. pret. & pp. contravened; ppr. contravening. [L. contra-venio—contra, against, and venio, to come.] 1. To come or be in conflict with; to oppose in principle or effect; to obstruct in operation; to defeat.

Laws, that place the subject in such a state, contravene the first principles of the compact of authority; they exact obedience and yield no protection. Johnson.

2. To act so as to violate; to transgress; as, we must not contravene the law.—SYN. To contradict, set aside, nullify, defeat, cross, obstruct.

Contravener (kon-tra-vên-ér), n. One who contravenes.

Contravention (kon-tra-vên-ing), n. Contravention; as, the contravention of an act of parliament. State Trials.

Contravention (kon-tra-vên'shon), n. 1. The act of contravening, violating, or transgressing; violation; opposition; as, the proceedings of the allies were in contravention of the treaty. 'In contravention of all his marriage speculations.' Motley.—2. The rays of light converge and convene in the eyes. Newton.

2. To come together; to meet in the same place; to assemble, as persons; as, Parliament will convene in February; the citizens convened in the city hall. — SYN. To meet, assemble, to congregate.

Convene (kon-vén), v.t. pret. & pp. convened; ppr. convening. To cause to assemble; to call together; to convoke.

And now the almighty father of the gods Convened a council in the blest abodes. Pope.

2. To summon judicially to meet or appear.

By the papal canon law, clerks can be convened only before an ecclesiastical judge. Amiff.

Convenee (kon-vē-nē'), n. One convened or summoned with others. [Rare.]

Convener (kon-vē-ŭ-ēr), n. 1. One who convenes or meets with others.

I do reverence the *convener*s (at the Synod of Dort) for their worth and learning. Montagu.

2. One who convenes or calls a meeting; in Scotland, one appointed to call an organized body together, as a committee, of which he is generally chairman.

Convenience, Conveniency (kon-vē-ni-ens, kon-vē-ni-en-si), n. [L. convenientia, from convenio, to convene; lit. a coming together.] 1. The state or quality of being convenient; fitness; suitability; as, a great deal of convenience in the situation of a place.—2. Freedom from discomfort or trouble; ease; comfort. 'Rather intent upon the end of God's glory than our own convenience.' Jer. Taylor.—3. That which gives ease or comfort; accommodation; that which is suited to wants or necessity.

A man alters his mind as the work proceeds, and will have this or that convenience more, of which he had not thought when he began. Dryden.

4. Opportune conjunction of affairs; opportunity; as, to do it at one's convenience.

Convenient (kon-vē-ni-ent), a. 1. Fit; suitable; proper. 'Foolish talking nor jesting, which are not convenient.' Eph. v. 4.

Feed me with food convenient for me. Prov. xix. 8.

Some arts are peculiarly convenient to particular nations. Tillotson.

2. Giving certain facilities or accommodation; as, a very convenient staircase.—3. Opportune; as, a convenient season.—4. At hand; handy. [Colloq.]

Obstinate heretics used to be brought thicker convenient for burning hard by. Thackeray.

SYN. Fit, suitable, adapted, fitted, suited, commodious.

Conveniently (kon-vē-ni-ent-ly), adv. 1. Fitly; suitably; with adaptation to the end or effect; as, that house is not conveniently situated for a tradesman.—2. Commodiously; with ease; without trouble or difficulty; as, he cannot conveniently accept the invitation.

Convening (kon-vē-nīng), n. The act of coming together; convention.

No man was better pleased with the convening of this parliament than myself. Edmon Barlow.

Convent (kon-vent), n. [O. Fr. convent; Fr. convent, from L. conventus, a meeting—con, together, and vento, ventum, to come.] 1. A meeting or assembly. 'A usual ceremony at their (the witches') convents or meetings.' Ben Jonson.—2. An association or community of persons devoted to religion; a body of monks or nuns. 'One of our convent, and his (the duke's) confessor.' Shak.—3. A house for persons devoted to religion; an abbey; a monastery; a nunnery.

Convent (kon-vent'), v.t. [L. conventus, conventio.] 1. To call together.

By secret messengers I did convent,
The English chieftaines all. Mir. for Mags.

2. To call before a judge or judicature.
He with his oath . . . will make up full clear,
Whenever he's convented. Shak.

Convent (kon-vent'), v.i. 1. To meet; to concur.—2. To serve; to agree; to be convenient.

When that is known and golden time convents,
A combination shall be made of our dear souls. Shak.

Convented (kon-vent'ed), pp. Summoned. Shak.

Conventional (kon-vent'ik-al), a. Of or belonging to a convent. A conventional prior was the same as an abbot.

Conventicle (kon-ven'ti-kl), n. [L. conventiculum, dim. of conventus.] 1. An assembly or gathering, especially a secret assembly.

They are commanded to abstain from all conventicles of men whatsoever. Amiff.

2. An assembly or meeting; usually applied to a meeting of dissenters from the established church for religious worship. In this sense it is used by English writers and in English statutes. Hence, an assembly, in contempt; specifically, it was applied to the secret meetings for religious worship held by the Scottish Covenanters, when they were persecuted for their faith in the reign of Charles II.

The first Christians would never have had recourse to nocturnal or clandestine conventicles till driven to them by the violence of persecutions. Hammond.

The old haunter of conventicles became an intolerable High Churchman. Macaulay.

Conventicle (kon-ven'ti-kl), v.t. pret. & pp. conventicled; ppr. conventicling. To belong to a conventicle; to partake of the nature of a conventicle. 'Conventicling schools . . . set up and taught secretly by fanatics.' South.

Conventicler (kon-ven'ti-klēr), n. One who supports or frequents conventicles.

Convention (kon-ven'shon), n. [L. conventio. See CONVENT.] 1. The act of coming together; a meeting; an assembly.

To-morrow morn we hold a great convention. Tennyson.

2. Union; coalition.

The conventions or associations of several parties of matter into bodies. Boyle.

3. A formal, recognized, or statutory meeting or assembly of men for civil or ecclesiastical purposes; particularly an assembly of delegates or representatives for consultation on important concerns, civil, political, or ecclesiastical. In Great Britain, convention is the name given to an extraordinary assembly of the estates of the realm, held without the king's writ; as the assembly which restored Charles II. to the throne, and that which declared the throne to be abdicated by James II.—Convention of estates, the meeting of the estates of the kingdom of Scotland, before the Union, upon any special occasion or emergency. These conventions consisted of any number of the estates that might be suddenly called together without the necessity of a formal citation, such as was required in summoning a regular parliament.—Convention of royal burghs, the yearly meeting held in Edinburgh by commissioners from the royal burghs, to treat of certain matters pertaining to the common good of the burghs. Their deliberations, however, excite little interest, and are in general directed to matters of no public importance. In the United States, this name is given to the assembly of representatives which forms a constitution of government, or political association; as, the convention which formed the constitution of the United States in 1787.—4. In diplomacy, an agreement or contract between two parties; an agreement previous to a definitive treaty; as, a military convention, that is, a treaty made between the commanders of two opposing armies concerning the terms on which a temporary cessation of hostilities shall take place between them. See extract.

And first of all, it is worth while to note that, properly, the word Treaty is applied exclusively to political and commercial objects; while the less pretentious though longer denomination of Convention is bestowed on special agreements of all kinds—as, for instance, international arrangements about postage, telegraphs, or literary rights. Blackwood's Mag.

5. Conventionality. [Rare.]

Now and then, not often, he (Wordsworth) bursts into an open condemnation of worldly conventions; and when he does, not Milton himself is grander or more severe. Lord Coleridge.

Dwell with these, and lose
Conventions, since to look on noble forms
Makes noble thro' the sensuous organism
That which is higher. Tennyson.

—Convention treaties, treaties entered into between different states, under which they each bind themselves to observe certain stipulations contained in the treaty.

Conventional (kon-ven'shon-al), a. [L. conventionalis, pertaining to an agreement, from conventus, a coming together, meeting, agreement—con, together, and vento, ventum, to come.] 1. Stipulated; formed by agreement; tacitly understood.—2. Arising out of custom or tacit agreement; sanctioned by general concurrence; depending on general concurrence; formal; as, a conventional use of language. In the fine arts, depending on accepted models or traditions, irrespective of the true principles of art.

Nobody ever yet used conventional art to decorate with, when he could do anything better. Ruskin.

—Conventional obligations, obligations resulting from the special agreement of parties, in contradistinction to natural or legal obligations.

Conventional services reserved by tenures on grants, made out of the crown or knights service. Hale.

—Conventional estates, those freeholds not of inheritance or estates for life, which are created by the express acts of the parties, in contradistinction to those which are legal, and arise from the operation and construction of law.

Conventionalism (kon-ven'shon-al-izm), n. That which is received or established by convention or agreement; a conventional phrase, form, or ceremony; anything depending on conventional rules and precepts.

We must be content with the conventionalities of vile solid knots and lumps of marble, instead of the golden cloud which encircles the fair human face with its waving mystery. Ruskin.

Conventionalist (kon-ven'shon-al-ist), n. One who adheres to a convention or treaty.

Conventionality (kon-ven'shon-al-i'ti), n. A conventional mode of living, acting, or speaking, as opposed to what is natural; a conventional term, principle, or custom.

It is strong and sturdy writing; and breaks up a whole region of conventionalities. Lamb.

Conventionalise (kon-ven'shon-al-iz), v.t. pret. & pp. conventionalized; ppr. conventionalizing. 1. To render conventional; to bring under the influence of conventional rules; to render observant of the conventional rules of society, as, to conventionalize a butcher's boy.—2. In the fine arts, to render or represent in accordance with conventional rules.

The fact is, neither (leaves nor figures) are idealized, but both are conventionalized on the same principles, and in the same way.

Conventionally (kon-ven'shon-al-i), adv. In a conventional manner; by tacit agreement.

Conventiary (kon-ven'shon-a-ri), a. Acting under contract; settled by stipulation; conventional; as, conventiary tenants.

Conventiener (kon-ven'shon-ēr), n. One who belongs to a convention.

Conventiologist (kon-ven'shon-ist), n. One who makes a contract.

Conventual (kon-ven'tū-al), a. [Fr. conventuel.] Belonging to a convent; monastic; as, conventual priors. 'Conventual regularity.' Thackeray.—Conventual church, the church attached or belonging to a convent.

Conventual (kon-ven'tū-al), n. One that lives in a convent; a monk or nun. 'The venerable conventual.' Addison.

Converge (kon-vej'), v.t. pret. & pp. converged; ppr. converging. [L. convergo—con, and vergo, to incline. See VERGEE.] To tend to one point; to incline and approach nearer together, as two lines which continually approach each other: opposed to diverge. Lines which converge in one direction diverge in the other.

Colours mingle, features join, and lines converge. Atteridge.

The mountains converge into a single ridge. Telferson.

Convergence, Convergency (kon-vej'ens, kon-vej'en-si), n. 1. The quality of converging; tendency to one point. 'The convergence or divergence of the rays falling on the pupil.' Berkeley.—2. In math, the gradual diminution of the terms of an indefinitely continued series. See CONVERGENT.

Convergent (kon-vej'ent), a. Tending to one point; approaching each other, as they proceed or are extended.—Convergent-nerve, in bot. a term used in describing the venation of leaves, to denote cases where the ribs form a curve, and meet at the point, as in Plantagolanceolata.—Convergent series. See CONVERGING.

Converging (kon-vej'ing), p. and a. Tending to one point; approaching each other, as lines extended.—Converging rays, in optics, those rays of light which, proceeding from different points of an object, approach, meet, and cross, and become diverging rays.—Converging series, in math, a series of numbers proceeding without end, and having terms which gradually diminish in such a manner that no number whatever of them added together will be as great as a certain given number. But when such a number can be added together as will exceed any given number, however great, the series is said to be divergent.

Conversible (kon-vej's-a-bl), a. [It. conversabile; Fr. conversible. See CONVERSABLE.] Qualified for conversation, or rather disposed to converse; ready or inclined to mutual communication of thoughts; sociable; free in discourse.

Mrs. Bardell let lodgings to many conversible single gentlemen, with great profit, but never brought any more actions for breach of promise of marriage. Dickens.

Conversableness (kon-vej's-a-bl-ness), n. The quality of being free in conversation; disposition or readiness to converse; sociability.

Convergent-nerve Leaf

Conversably (kon-vér's-a-bli), adv. In a conversable manner.

Conversance, Conversancy (kon-vér's-ans, kon-vér's-an-si), n. The state of being conversant; habit of familiarity; familiar intercourse or acquaintance. [Rare.]

Conversant (kon-vér's-ant), a. [See CONVERSE, verb.] 1. Keeping company; having frequent or customary intercourse; intimately associating; familiar by fellowship or cohabitation; acquainted: followed by with, formerly also by among. 'The strangers that were conversant among them.' Joah. viii. 35.

But the men were very good to us . . . as long as we were conversant with them. 1 Sam. xxv. 15.

Never to be infected with delight,
Nor conversant with ease and idleness. Shak.

2. Acquainted by familiar use or study: followed generally by with; formerly, and yet occasionally, by in.

The learning and skill he had by being conversant in their books. Hooker.

He uses the different dialects as one who had been conversant with them all. Pope.

3. Having concern or relation to; concerned or occupied: followed by about.

Education is conversant about children. Watson.

Conversant (kon-vér's-ant), n. One who converses with another.

Conversantly (kon-vér's-ant-li), adv. In a conversant or familiar manner.

Conversation (kon-vér-sá'shon), n. 1. General course of manners; behaviour; deportment, especially as it respects morals. [Obsolescent.]

Let your conversation be as becometh the gospel. Phil. i. 27.

Be ye holy in all manner of conversation. 1 Pet. i. 15.

2. A keeping company; familiar intercourse; intimate fellowship or association; commerce in social life. 'Conversation with the best company.' Dryden. [Obsolescent.]

3.† Familiar intercourse or acquaintance from using or studying. 'Much conversation in books.' Bacon.—4. Familiar discourse; general intercourse of sentiments; chat; unrestrained talk, opposed to a formal conference. [This is now the most general use of the word.]

It is a secret known but to few, yet of no small use in the conduct of life, that when you fall into a man's conversation, the first thing you should consider is whether he has a greater inclination to hear you, or that you should hear him. Sterne.

One of the best rules for conversation is never to say a thing which any of the company can reasonably wish we had rather left unsaid. Sterne.

5. Carnal commerce, legitimate or illegitimate, but most usually the latter; as, criminal conversation.—Conversation (or speaking) tube, a pipe made of gutta-percha, caoutchouc, or metal for conveying sound or for delivering messages from one part of a building to another; also a tube for enabling conversation to be carried on easily with deaf people.—SYN. Intercourse, communion, commerce, familiarity, discourse, dialogue, colloquy, talk, chat.

Conversational (kon-vér-sá'shon-al), a. Pertaining to conversation; done in mutual discourse or talk.

Conversationalist (kon-vér-sá'shon-al-ist), n. One who excels in conversation.

Conversational (kon-vér-sá'shon-d), a. Having a certain behaviour or deportment.

Till she be better conversational . . .
I'll keep as far from her as the gallows. Bacon & F.

Conversationalism (kon-vér-sá'shon-izm), n. A word or phrase used in easy conversation; a colloquialism.

Conversationalist (kon-vér-sá'shon-ist), n. One who excels in conversation.

Not to quit quite omit the talking stage,
Kit-Cat the famous conversationalist. Rymer.

Conversative (kon-vér's-at-iv), a. Relating to an intercourse with men; social: opposed to contemplative.

She chose to endure him with the conversative qualities of youth. Wotton.

Conversations (kon-vér-sa's-tai-d'nás), n. [It.] A meeting for conversation, particularly on literary subjects.

Converse (kon-vér's), v. i. pret. & pp. conversed; ppr. conversing. [Fr. converser; L. conversor, to associate with—con, with, versor, to be engaged in anything, live or remain in a place, freq. of verto, versum, to turn.] 1. To keep company; to associate; to hold intercourse and be intimately acquainted: followed by with.

For him who lonely loves
To seek the distant hills, and there converse with nature. Thomson.

2.† To have sexual commerce. Guardian.—3. To talk familiarly; to have free intercourse in mutual communication of thoughts and opinions; to convey thoughts reciprocally: followed by with before the person addressed, and on before the subject.

With thee conversing I forget all time;
All seasons and their change, all please alike. Milton.

So she goes by him attended,
Hears him lovingly converse. Tennyson.

[This is now the most general use of the word.]—SYN. To associate, commune, discourse, talk, speak.

Converse (kon-vér's), n. [See above.] 1. Acquaintance by frequent or customary intercourse; cohabitation; familiarity: in this sense the word may include discourse or not; as, to hold converse with persons of different sects; or to hold converse with terrestrial things.

There studious let me sit,
And hold high converse with the mighty dead. Thomson.

'Tis but to hold
Converse with Nature's charms. Rymer.

2. Conversation; familiar discourse or talk; free interchange of thoughts or opinions. 'Thy converse drew us with delight.' Tennyson.

Formed by thy converse happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

Converse (kon-vér's), n. [L. converso, con-verti, conversum, to turn round.] 1. A part answering or corresponding to another, but differing from it in nature and required to make it complete; a reciprocating part; the complement; the counterpart; as, the hollows in a mould in which a medal has been cast are the converses of the parts of the medal in relief: used often in the sense of the opposite, the contrary, the reverse.

'John Bruce' was written uncompromisingly in every line of his face, just the converse of Forrester, whom old maids of rigid virtue, after seeing him twice, were irresistibly impelled to speak of as 'Charley.' Lawrence.

2. In math. an opposite proposition; thus, after drawing a conclusion from something supposed, we invert the order, making the conclusion the supposition or premises, and draw from it what was first supposed. Thus, if two sides of a triangle are equal, the angles opposite the sides are equal; and the converse is true: if these angles are equal the two sides are equal.—3. In logic, a proposition which is formed from another by interchanging the subject and predicate. Thus, 'religion is the truest wisdom' is a proposition, and its converse is, 'the truest wisdom is religion.'

Converse (kon-vér's), a. [See CONVERT.] Turned about; opposite; reciprocal.

Conversely (kon-vér's-li), adv. With change of order; in a contrary order; reciprocally.

As whatever of the produce of the country is devoted to production in capital, so conversely, the whole of the capital of the country is devoted to production. J. S. Mill.

In math. by conversion. See CONVERSION.

Convertible (kon-vér's-i-bli), a. Capable of being converted or made converse. 'This convertible . . . sorites.' Hammond.

Conversing (kon-vér's-ing), n. Conversation; intercourse; dealing.

It were very reasonable to propound to ourselves in all our conversings with others, that one great design of doing some good to their souls. Merr.

Conversion (kon-vér'shon), n. [L. conversio. See CONVERT.] 1. In a general sense, a turning or change from one state to another; with regard to substances, transmutation; as, a conversion of water into ice, or of food into chyle or blood.—2. Milit. a change of front, as when a body of troops is attacked in the flank, and they change their position to face the enemy.—3. In theol. a change of heart or disposition, in which the enmity of the heart to God and his law, and the obstinacy of the will, are subdued, and are succeeded by supreme love to God and his moral government, and a reformation of life.—4. Change from one side or party to another.

That conversion will be suspected that apparently concurs with interest. Johnson.

5. A change from one religion to another. 'The conversion of the Gentiles.' Acts xv. 4.

6. In law, the act of appropriating to private use; as, in trover and conversion.—7. Naut. the reduction of a vessel by one deck, thereby converting a line-of-battle ship into a frigate, or a crank three-decker into a good two-decker, or a serviceable vessel into a hulk.—Conversion of equations, in alg. the reduction of equations by multiplication, or the manner of altering an equation when the quantity sought or any member of it is a fraction; the reducing of a fractional equation into an integral one.—Conversion of propositions, in logic, is a changing of the subject into the place of the predicate, and still retaining the quality of the proposition; as, 'no virtuous man is a rebel'; 'no rebel is a virtuous man.' All logical conversion is illative, that is, the truth of the converse follows from that of the original proposition.—Centre of conversion, in mech. is the point in a body about which it turns as a centre, when a force is applied to any part of it, or unequal forces to its different parts.—Conversion of proportions, in math. is when of four proportionals it is inferred that the first is to its excess above the second as the third to its excess above the fourth; and the four terms, when thus arranged, are said to be proportionals by conversion.

Convertible (kon-vér's-iv), a. Capable of being converted or changed; convertible. [Rare or obsolete.]

Conversible (kon-vér's-iv), a. Conversable; social. [Rare or obsolete.]

To be rude or foolish is the badge of . . . one deficient in the conversible quality of man. Felltham.

Convert (kon-vér't), v. t. [L. converso, to turn round, to turn towards—con, with, and verto, to turn.] 1.† To cause to turn; to turn. 'O, which way shall I convert myself.' B. Jonson.

Crystals will calcine into electricity and convert the needs freely placed. Sir T. Browne.

2. To change or turn into another substance or form.

If the whole atmosphere was converted into water, it would make no more than eleven yards water about the earth. T. Burnet.

3. To change from one state to another; as, to convert a barren waste into a fruitful field; to convert rude savages into civilized, man.

That still lessens
The sorrow, and converts it high to joy. Milton.

4. To change or turn from one religion to another, or from one party or sect to another. 'Augustine is converted by St. Ambrose's sermon.' Hammond.

No attempt was made to convert the Moslems Prussia.

5. To turn from a bad life to a good one; to change the heart and moral character, from enmity to God and from vicious habits, to love of God and to a holy life.

Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out. Acts iii. 19.

He that converteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death. Jan. v. 20.

6. To turn from one use or destination to another; as, to convert liberty into an engine of oppression.—7. To divert from the proper or intended use; to change the destination of; to appropriate.

He acquitted himself not like an honest man; for he converted the prizes to his own use. Arbutnot.

8. To change one proposition into another, so that what was the subject of the first becomes the predicate of the second; as, all sin is a transgression of the law; but every transgression of the law is sin.—9.† To turn into another language. 'Cætilius more elegantly converted.' B. Jonson.

Convert (kon-vér't), v. i. To turn or be changed; to undergo a change.

The love of wicked friends converts to fear;
That fear, to hate. Shak.

Convert (kon-vér't), n. 1. A person who is converted from one opinion or practice to another; a person who renounces one creed, religious system, or party, and embraces another: applied particularly to those who change their religious opinions, but applicable to political or philosophical sects.—2. In a more strict sense, one who is turned from sin to holiness.

Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness. Is. i. 27.

3. In monasteries, a lay friar or brother admitted to the service of the house, without orders, and not allowed to sing in the choir.—Convert, Proselyte, Apostate, Pervert.

Convert, one who changes one opinion (generally in religion) for another: not used in a bad sense. Proselyte is sometimes used as a synonyme for convert, but is strictly confined to one who changes his religion; and proselytism does not, like conversion, necessarily imply conviction. A proselyte may be made by external influences brought to bear on him. Apostate, pervert, terms applied to one who renounces what the person using these terms holds to be truth for what he holds to be error. The latter term is of modern introduction, and is intended to express the opposite of convert. It is generally applied to a person who abandons the Church of England or one of the other Protestant churches for the Roman Catholic Church. The term apostate is usually applied to one who has renounced the Christian religion, and conveys a strong feeling of reprobation. It is also used in a wider sense, and as nearly equivalent to renegade.

Converter (kon-vert'ér), n. One who converts; one who makes convert.

The seasons converters of souls and labourers in God's vineyard. Jer. Taylor.
Convertibility (kon-vert'i-bil'i-ti), n. (From convertible.) 1. The condition or quality of being convertible; the capability of being converted or changed from one substance, form, or state to another; as, the convertibility of water into oxygen and hydrogen. 'The mutual convertibility of land into money and of money into land.' Burke.—2. The quality of being changeable from one sound to another; as, the convertibility of m with b, or of d into t.

Convertible (kon-vert'i-bl), a. [L. convertibilis—con, and verto, to turn.] 1. That may be changed; susceptible of change; transmutable; transformable.

The labour of the miner, for example, consists of operations for digging out of the earth substances convertible by industry into various articles fitted for human use. J. S. Mill.

2. So exactly correspondent that one may be used for another; interchangeable.

The law and the opinion of the judge are not always convertible terms. Blackstone.

So long as we are in the region of nature, . . . miraculous and incredible may be allowed to remain convertible terms. Truett.

3. That may be changed, as one letter for another; as, b, p, and f are convertible letters.

Convertibleness (kon-vert'i-bl-nes), n. Convertibility.

Convertibly (kon-vert'i-bl), adv. Reciprocally; with interchange of terms.

Convertite (kon-vert-it), n. A convert.

Convex (kon'veks), a. [L. convexus, carried round, rounded off, vaulted—con, together, and vehō, vevum, to carry.] 1. Rising or swelling into a spherical or rounded form; gibbous: opposed to concave, convex being applied to the sphericity of an exterior surface, concave to that of an interior surface; as, a convex mirror or lens. Convexity and concavity are of particular importance in optics, as applied to mirrors and lenses. See CONCAVO-CONVEX, CONVEXO-CONCAVE, &c.—2. In bot. applied to a leaf or receptacle.

Convex or Plano-convex Lens.

Convex (kon'veks), n. A convex body.

Half heaven's convex glitters with the flame. Titchell.

Convexed (kon'vekst), a. Made convex; protuberant in a spherical form.

Convexedly (kon-veks'ed-li), adv. In a convex form.

Convexity (kon-veks'i-ti), n. [L. convexitas.] The exterior surface of a convex body; a gibbous or globular form; roundness.

The very convexity of the earth. Bentley.

Convexly (kon'veks-li), adv. In a convex form; as, a body convexly conical.

Convexness, Convexedness (kon'veks-nes, kon-veks'ed-nes), n. Convexity (which see).

Convexo-concave (kon-veks'ò-kon-käv), a. Convex on one side and concave on the other; having the hollow on the inside corresponding to the convex surface; as, a convexo-concave lens, in which the two surfaces meet if produced, the convexity exceeding the concavity. It is otherwise called a meniscus, and is chiefly used for spectacles. It may be regarded as a convex lens.

Convexo-concave Lens.

Convexo-convex (kon-veks'ò-kon-veks), a. Convex on both sides, as a lens; otherwise termed a double-convex lens.

Convexo-plane (kon-veks'ò-plan), a. Convex on the one side and plane on the other.

Convict (kon-vikt'), v. t. [L. convincio, con-victum—con, and vinco, to vanquish or subdue. See CONVINCE.] 1. To determine the truth of a charge against one; to prove or find guilty of a crime charged; to determine or decide to be guilty, as by the verdict of a jury, by confession, or other legal decision; as, the jury convicted the prisoner of felony.

2. To convince of sin; to prove or determine to be guilty, as by the conscience.

They who heard it, being convicted by their own conscience, went out one by one. Ja. viii. 9.

3. † To confute; to prove or show to be false.

Although not only reason but experience may well convict it, yet will it not by divers be rejected. Sir T. Browne.

4. † To show by proof or evidence.

Imagining that these proofs will convict a testament to have that in it which other men can nowhere by reading find. Hooker.

5. † To condemn to destruction; to doom.

So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armada of convicted sail
Is scattered and disjointed from fellowship. Shak.

Convict† (kon-vikt'), pp. (Abbrev. of convicted.) Proved or found guilty.

Before I be convict by course of law. Shak.

Convict (kon-vikt'), n. A person proved or found guilty of a crime alleged against him, either by the verdict of a jury or other legal decision; in popular language, commonly a person undergoing penal servitude.—Syn. Malefactor, culprit, felon, criminal.

Conviction (kon-vik'shon), n. 1. The act of a legal tribunal adjudging, finding, or determining a person to be guilty of an offence charged against him. Convictions generally proceed on the verdict of a jury, but our law also admits of summary convictions without the intervention of a jury in certain circumstances, as in cases of contempt of court, of attempt to corrupt or withhold evidence, of malversation by persons intrusted with the criminal police of the country, of certain offences against the revenue laws, and in proceedings before sheriffs and justices of the peace for minor offences.—2. The act of convincing or compelling one to admit the truth of a charge or the truth of what is alleged; the act of convincing of error; confutation.

For all his tedious talk is but vain boast,
Or subtle shifts conviction to evade. Milton.

3. The state of being convinced or fully persuaded; strong belief on the ground of satisfactory evidence; settled persuasion.

An act of divine grace could alone work an instantaneous change in the conviction of a nation. Prescott.

4. The state of being convinced or convicted, as by the admonitions or dictates of conscience; the state of being convicted of sin. 'To call evil good, and good evil, against the convictions of conscience.' Swift.

The manner of his conviction was designed, not as a popular privilege to him, but as a . . . lasting argument for the conviction of others. Macbride.

—Persuasion, Conviction, Faith, Opinion, Belief. See under PERSUASION.

Convictionism (kon-vikt-izm), n. The convict system; the system of transporting convicts to penal settlements. 'The evils of convictionism.' W. Howitt.

Convictive (kon-vikt'iv), a. Having the power to convince or convict. 'Convictive evidence.' Glasville. [Rare or obsolete.]

Convictively (kon-vikt'iv-li), adv. In a convincing manner.

Convince (kon-vins'), v. t. pret. & pp. convicted; pp. convincing. [L. convincio—con, and vinco, to vanquish.] 1. To persuade or satisfy the mind by evidence; to subdue the opposition of the mind to yield to what is alleged, and compel it to yield its assent; as, to convince a man of his errors, or to convince him of the truth.

For he mightily convincing the Jews, shewing by the Scriptures that Jesus was the Christ. Acts xviii. 20.

2. † To convict; to prove guilty; to constrain one to admit or acknowledge himself to be guilty.

If ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin, and are convincing of (by) the law as transgressors. Jam. ii. 9.

Drag hence
This impious judge, piecemeal to tear his limbs
Before the law convincing him. W. Waver.

3. † To evince; to demonstrate; to prove.

Yet this, sure, methinks, convincing a power for the sovereign to raise payments for land forces. Quoted by Hallam.

4. † To overpower; to surmount; to vanquish.

His two chamberlains
Will with wine and wassail to convince,
That merriment, the order of the house,
Shall be a fault.

3. To refuse.

God never wrought miracle to convince atheism,
Because his ordinary works convince it. Shaks.

—Convincer, Persuader. To convince a person is to satisfy his understanding as to the truth of a certain statement, to persuade him to influence his feelings or will.

Convivial (kon-viv'i-al), a. [L. convivialis, from convivere, a guest, or convive, to live or eat and drink together—conv, and vive, to live. See VICTUAL.] Relating to a feast or entertainment, social, social; jovial. 'Your social and convivial spirit.' Dr. Johnson.

I was the first who set up festivity,
Which feast, convivial meetings, we did mean. See T. Browne.

Convivialist (kon-viv'i-al-ist), n. A person of convivial habits.

Conviviality (kon-viv'i-al-iti), n. 1. The good humour or mirth indulged in an entertainment. 2. A convivial spirit or disposition.

Convivially (kon-viv'i-al-ly), adv. In a spirit of conviviality, in a convivial manner; festively, convivially inclined.

Convocate (kon-vok'eit), v.t. [pret. & pp. convoked, ppr. convoking.] [L. convoco, to convoke—con, and voco, to call. See VOICE.] To convoke; to call or summon to meet, to assemble by summons.

Convocation (kon-vok'e-shon), n. [See CONVOCATE.] 1. The act of calling or assembling by summons. 'Diophantus, making a general convocation, spoke in this manner.' See P. Sidney.—2. An assembly.

In the first day there shall be a holy convocation. See Ps. 92.

3. In England, an assembly of the clergy, by their representatives, to consult on ecclesiastical affairs. There are, strictly speaking, two such assemblies—one for the archiepiscopal province of Canterbury, the other for that of York, though the former is often spoken of as the Convocation, this province being by far the more important. In the province of Canterbury the Convocation consists of an upper and a lower house. In the upper house sit the archbishops and bishops; in the lower house the deans and archdeacons and the inferior clergy represented by their proctors. In former times convocations had the power of enacting canons, but this power was virtually abolished by the statutes of Henry VIII., Elizabeth, and Charles II., since that time the convocation has had no legislative business to transact and it had become customary to prorogue it every year immediately upon its assembling. Of late years, however, there has been a disposition to revive its deliberative functions, and to utilize them for the good of the church and of religion. Thus the propriety of revising the authorized translation of the Holy Scriptures and other cognate subjects have been discussed in its meetings.—4. House of Convocation, in the University of Oxford, is the assembly which enacts, amends, etc., laws and statutes, elects burgesses, many professors, and other officers, etc. It is composed of all members of the university who have at any time been regents, and who, if independent members, have retained their names on the books of their respective colleges.—5. Meeting, assembly, congregation, congress, diet, convention, synod, council.

Convocational (kon-vok'e-shon-al), a. Relating to a convocation. [Rare.]

Convocationist (kon-vok'e-shon-ist), n. One who supports convocation, an advocate of convocation, one favourable to the revival of its powers.

Convolve (kon-volv'), v.t. [pret. & pp. convolved, ppr. convolving.] [L. convolve, Fr. convolver. See VOICE.] To call together; to summon to meet; to assemble by summons.

From March, when, to April, when the houses of parliament were not convolved. Never in our history had there been an interval of sixteen years between parliament and parliament. Macaulay.

—Call, Convoke, Summon. See under CALL. Convolute, Convolutated (kon-volv'it-ed), a. Rolled together, or one part on another, as the sides or margins of nascent leaves in plants, or as the petals and stigmas in crocus. 'Beaks recurved and convoluted like a ram's horn.' Pennant.—Convolute house, in sand the upper and lower turbinated bones of the nose.

Convolution (kon-volv'it-shon), n. [L. convolutio, convolutio—con, together, and volvo, to roll, to turn.] 1. The act of rolling or winding together, or one thing on another, a winding motion.

Over the calm sea in convulsion swift
The feathered eddy flies. Thomson.

2. The state of being rolled upon itself or rolled or wound together, a turn or winding; a fold, as, the convolutions of the brain, of the intestines, of a vine. 'The convolutions of a smooth-tipped shell.' Wardlaw.

My head
Which bears a ocean's brain about,
Unsubject to confusion,
The mind and matter, out and out
Thy every convolution. Thomson.

Convolute (kon-volv'it-iv), a. In bot sense as Convolute.

Convolve (kon-volv'), v.t. [pret. & pp. convolved, ppr. convolving.] [L. convolve—con, and volvo, to roll. See WALLOW.] To roll or wind together; to roll one part on another.

Then from first knew point,
And with him to and fro convolved. Shaks.

Convolutaceous (kon-volv'it-ak'us), a. [See CONVOLUTACE.] A nat order of monophyllous acropne, consisting of herbs or shrubs usually twining. The leaves are opposite, and the showy flowers are tubular, bell-shaped or funnel-shaped. They are often purplish, but some, like the sweet-potato, yield succulent roots. About a thousand species have been described from temperate but chiefly from tropical countries.

Convolutaceous (kon-volv'it-ak'us), a. Relating to the convolutaceous.

Convolutin (kon-volv'it-in), n. See RHODODENDRUM.

Convolutus (kon-volv'it-us), n. [L. hindwood, from convolve, to enwine, in reference to their twining habit.] Hindwood, a genus of plants, nat order Convolutaceae, consisting of slender twining herbs, with milky juice. The flowers are white, pink, purple, or blue, with the five stamens inserted at the bottom of the bell-shaped corolla. Three species are indigenous to Britain, and are popularly known as hindweeds. Many of the species are exceedingly beautiful. Oncoclema Jalepa was long considered as yielding the true jalap of commerce. This is now known to be procured from Rhopodium Purya, an allied plant, found on the Mexican Andes, and the root is sent, under the name of Purgul Jalapa, to Vera Cruz, whence it reaches Europe either directly or through New York. C. Scammonia furnishes the scammony of commerce, which is the concrete juice of the root of the plant, and is used as a purgative. It is imported from Smyrna, but is seldom procured in an unadulterated state, the chief adulteration being chalk and starch.

Convoy (kon-voy'), v.t. [Fr. convoier—con, along with, and voie, a way. See CORVET.] 1. To accompany on the way for protection either by sea or land, to escort; as, ships of war conveyed the Jamaica Fleet, the troops conveyed the baggage waggon. 2. [Scotch.] To set out with a person and accompany him for a part or the whole of the way he has to go.

But hark! a rap comes gently to the door;
Jenny, who hears the weaving o'er the loom,
Tells how a sorrow-lad came o'er the moor,
To do some errands, and convey her home. Burns.

Convey (kon-voy'), v. 1. A protecting force accompanying ships or property on their way from place to place either by sea or land. By sea, a ship or ships of war which accompany merchantmen for protection from an enemy. By land, any body of troops which accompany provisions, ammunition, or other property for protection. In this sense it is sometimes used as an adjective; as, 'Convey ships accompany their merchants.' Dryden.—2. The ship or fleet conducted and protected; that which is conducted by a protecting force; that which is conveyed. [The word sometimes includes both the protecting and protected force.] Clarke.—3. The act of attending for defence. 'To obtain the convey of a man of war.' Nassau.

Such fellows will learn you by rote where services were done, at such a stage, at such a convey. Shaks.

4. To conveyance. 'Crows for convey put into his purse.' Shaks.

Convulse (kon-vuls'), v.t. [L. convulsio, convulsion, convulsio—con, and velle, to pull or pluck.] 1. To draw or contract, as the muscular parts of an animal body, to affect by irregular spasms, as, the whole frame may be convulsed by agony.—2. To shake, to affect by violent irregular action.

Conveying heaven and earth. Thomson.

CONV To agitate, disturb, tear, rend.

Convulsion (kon-vul'shon), n. [L. convulsio.] 1. The act of agitating or shaking.

These two convulsive fits
With horrible convulsions to and fro
He tugged. Shaks.

2. A violent and involuntary contraction of the muscular parts of an animal body, with alternate relaxations. Infants are very frequently affected with convulsions, in which state their body undergoes violent, spasmodic contractions, feeling and voluntary motion ceasing for the time being. Such attacks usually have their origin in bad ventilation and injudicious feeding, and are frequently fatal.—3. Any violent and irregular motion; turmoil, tumult, commotion; as, a great convulsion of nature.

Whether it be that Providence at certain periods sends great men into the world, or that such at all times incessantly exist, and are developed into action by national convulsions, the fact is undeniably that the great men who effected the American and French revolutions . . . left behind them no equals. See Chambers.

CONV Agitation, commotion, tumult, disturbance, turmoil, tremor, perturbation, thrum.

Convulsional (kon-vul'shon-al), a. Having convulsions, relating to convulsions. [Rare.]

Convulsional (kon-vul'shon-al), n. One of those fanatics of the last century in France who had or affected to have convulsions, produced by religious impulses. The name was first applied to fanatics who exhibited varied seizures at the tomb of a Jesuit at St. Médard, some jumping, some barking, and others moving like a cat.

Convulsional (kon-vul'shon-al), a. Pertaining to convulsion. 'Convulsional struggles.' See W. Scott.

Convulsive (kon-vuls'iv), a. 1. Producing or tending to produce convulsion. 'Convulsive rage.' Dryden. 'Convulsive sorrow.' Prior.—2. Attended with, or characterized by, convulsion or spasms. 'Convulsive motions.' See M. Hale.

'The cooling brook.' Goldsmith.—Cooling card, a name probably borrowed from primero or some other game in which money was staked upon a card, and signifying a card so decisive as to cool the courage of the adversary; hence, Ag, something to damp one's hopes or ardour.

There all is marr'd; there lies a cooling card. Shak.

These hot youths,

I fear, will find a cooling card. Beau. & Fl.

Coolish (kōl'ish), a. Somewhat cool.

Coolly (kōl'li), adv. 1. Without heat or sharp cold.—2. In a cool or indifferent manner; not cordially; without passion or ardour; as, he was coolly received at court.

'No; there is not,' rejoined the guard coolly. Dickens.

3. Without haste; calmly; deliberately; as, the design was formed coolly, and executed with firmness.

Coolly (kōl'li), a. Cool; somewhat cold. [Rare.]

Keeping my sheep among the coolly shade. Spenser.

Coolness (kōl'nes), n. 1. A moderate degree of cold; a temperature between cold and heat; as, the coolness of the summer's evening. 'Fad'd for coolness in the chapel-yard.' Tennyson.—2. A moderate degree or a want of passion; want of ardour or zeal; indifference; want of affection. 'They parted with coolness.' Clarendon.—3. Quiet and unabashed impudence. [Colloq.]

Cool-tankard (kōl'tang-kérd), n. An old English beverage of various composition, but usually made of ale, with a little wine, or wine and water, with an addition of lemon-juice, spices, and borage, or other savoury herbs.

Cool-wort (kōl'wért), n. In America, the popular name of a saxifragaceous plant, Tiarella cordifolia, the properties of which are diuretic and tonic. It is prepared by the Shakers.

Cooly, n. See COOLIE.

Coom (kōm), n. [Perhaps from Fr. écume, foam, dross; O.G. scūm.] Soot; refuse matter; the matter that works out of the naves or boxes of carriage wheels. In Scotland, also applied to the dust which falls from coals.

Coomb, Comb (kōm, kōm), n. [A. Sax. cumb, a liquid measure; apparently the same word as Dan. and G. kumme, a bowl, a basin; Prov. E. comb, a brewing vat; D. kom, a trough, a chest.] A dry measure of 4 bushels or half a quarter.

Coomb, Coombe (kōm), n. [W. ciom, a hollow.] A valley between hills. Also written Coomb, Coombe. See COMB.

Coomie (kō'mi), n. A large present, in place of customs-duty, demanded by the kings and chiefs on the Bonny and other South African rivers, from supercargoes of ships, for permission to trade with the natives.

Coon (kōn), n. An American abbreviation of raccoon.—A gone coon, a person in a very bad way; one in a hopeless position.—A coon's age, a long time; as, I have not seen you for a coon's age.

Coop (kōp), n. [From L. cupa, a cask or vessel, which appears also in Fr. cuve, D. kup, G. kufe, W. cubair, a hen-coop. Akin cup.] 1. A box of boards grated or barred on one side for keeping fowls in confinement. It is usually applied to long boxes for keeping poultry for fattening or conveyance on board of ships, as cage is used for a small box to keep singing birds in houses.—2. A pen; an inclosed place for small animals.—3. A barrel or cask for the preservation of liquors.—4. A tumbrel or close cart. [Scottch.]

Coop (kōp), v. t. 1. To put in a coop; to confine in a coop; hence, to shut up or confine in a narrow compass; usually followed by up, sometimes by in or within.

The Trojans cooped within their walls. Dryden.

They are cooped in close by the laws of the country. Locke.

2. To work on in the manner of a cooper. 'Shaken tubs . . . be new coop'd.' Holland. SYN. To confine, imprison, inclose.

Coopée (kō-pē), n. Same as Coupee.

Cooper (kō-pēr), n. [See COOP.] One whose occupation is to make barrels, hogheads, butts, tubs, and casks of various kinds.

Cooper (kō-pēr), v. t. and i. To do the work of a cooper; to make barrels, hogheads, casks, &c.; to mend or put in order, as a cooper does casks.

Cooper (kō-pēr), n. A popular London beverage, consisting of one-half stout and one-half porter. The term arose from the practice at breweries of allowing the coopers a daily portion of stout and porter. As they do not like to drink porter after stout, they mix the two together.

Cooperage (kō-pēr-āj), n. 1. The price paid for coopers' work.—2. A place where coopers' work is done.—3. The work or business of a cooper.

Co-operant (kō-op'er-ant), a. Operating together. 'Graces preventent, subsequent, or co-operant.' Bp. Nicholson.

I see in part

That all, as in some piece of art,

Is toil co-operant to an end. Tennyson

Co-operate (kō-op'er-āt), v. i. pret. & pp. co-operated, ppr. co-operating. [L. co for con, and opero, to work, from opus, work.] 1. To act or operate jointly with another or others to the same end; to work or labour with mutual efforts to promote the same object; as, Russia co-operated with Great Britain, Austria, and Prussia in reducing the power of Bonaparte.

The works of Milton cannot be comprehended or enjoyed unless the mind of the reader co-operate with that of the writer. Macaulay.

2. To unite in producing the same effect; as, natural and moral events co-operate in illustrating the wisdom of the Creator. 'Whate'er co-operates to the common mirth.' Craikshaw.

Co-operation (kō-op'er-ā-shon), n. The act of working or operating together to one end; joint operation; concurrent effort or labour; as, the co-operation of the combined powers, the co-operation of the understanding and the will. The principle of co-operation in the purchase of goods (see CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES), as also in the production of manufactured articles, has of late received wide development. In some establishments the principle is introduced partially, so that each worker has a direct interest in the success of the undertaking.

Co-operative (kō-op'ér-iv), a. Operating jointly to the same end.—Co-operative Society, a joint-stock, limited-liability society, formed for the purpose of providing the members with genuine goods at prime cost, with the simple cost of management added. Such societies have a shop or shops, the profits of which are divided among the members in proportion to the amount of their purchases. On selling articles a ticket or other check is given to the purchaser with the sum paid for the goods stamped on it. These tickets are called in periodically, and a certain sum returned to the holders according to the amount of their purchases. Co-operative societies are regulated by 18 and 14 Vict. cxxv, and 18 and 19 Vict. xciii. By an act passed in 1867 they are bound to make a return of their transactions, membership, &c.

Co-operator (kō-op'ér-iv), n. One who endeavours jointly with others to promote the same end.

Coopering (kō-pér-ing), n. The art of manufacturing or repairing casks, barrels, vats, and all kinds of circular or elliptic wooden vessels that are bound together by hoops.

Coopery (kō-pé-ri), n. The trade of a cooper.

Co-optate (kō-op'tát), v. t. [L. coopto, to receive or elect into some body.] To choose, or choose with another. Cookhouse.

Co-optation (kō-op'tá-shun), n. Adoption, assumption. 'The first election and co-optation of a friend.' Hoswell.

Co-ordain (kō-or-dán), v. t. (See ORDAIN) To ordain or appoint one for some purpose along with another or others.

So must Christ be of all the creatures appointed and co-ordinated with him. Goodwin.

Co-ordinance (kō-or-din-ans), n. Joint ordinance.

Co-ordinate (kō-or-din-át), a. [L. co-ordinatus, from ordinatus, to regulate. See ORDER.] Being of equal order, or of the same rank or degree, not subordinate, as, two courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction.

Co-ordinate (kō-or-din-át), v. t. pret. & pp. co-ordinated; ppr. co-ordinating. To make co-ordinate; to arrange a set of things each in its due and relative order; to harmonize.

The different parts of each being must be co-ordinated in such a manner as to render the total being possible. Hoswell.

The founders of Universities held the theory that the Scriptures and Aristotle taken together, the latter being limited by the former, contained all knowledge worth having, and that the business of philosophy was to interpret and co-ordinate these two. Huxley.

Co-ordinate (kō-or-din-át), n. 1. A person or thing of the same rank with another thing, and working or employed to the same end. 2. pl. In geom. a term applied to a system of lines, to which points under consideration are referred, and by means of which their position is determined. Co-ordinates either determine the position of a point in space or in a plane which is understood to contain all the figure under consideration, as in the first six books of Euclid. They determine position by straight lines only, or by a straight line and angles, in the latter case they are called polar co-ordinates. When co-ordinates are at right angles to each other they are called rectangular co-ordinates, and when they make any other angle with each other they are called oblique co-ordinates. In plane geom. one of the co-ordinates is called the abscissa, and the other the ordinate. The co-ordinates of a star are its distances from the pole of the heavens and from the meridian of the place of observation, measured in degrees of the respective circles. In the fig. c, d and a are co-ordinates, the first being an abscissa, to which, through the point p, is drawn the ordinate b a. In co-ordinates, the abscissa and ordinate may be drawn making any angle with each other.

Co-ordinately (kō-or-din-át-ly), adv. In the same order or rank, in equal degree; without subordination.

Co-ordinateness (kō-or-din-át-ness), n. The state of being co-ordinate; equality of rank and authority.

Co-ordination (kō-or-din-át-shun), n. The act of making co-ordinate; the act of arranging a set of things, each in its relative order; the state of being so arranged or co-ordinated, the state of holding equal rank, or of standing in the same relation to something higher.

In the high court of parliament there is a rare co-ordination of power. Hoswell.

Co-ordinative (kō-or-din-át-iv), a. In grammar, expressing or indicating co-ordination.

Cocoin, s. Related, cousin. See COUSIN, a.

Cocost (kúst), pret. Cook. [Scotch.]

They reef'd, they set, they cross'd, they cleek'd. Tu lla cackles seat and reek'd.

And cook her dodgins to the work, Burns.

Coot (kót), n. (Perhaps from W. coetlar (coet=hen), a coot, from cwyt, short, bobbed; which may also be the origin of D. koot, a coot.) A gallinule bird of the genus Fulica and family Rallidae, frequenting lakes and ponds. The common coot (F. atra) has a bald forehead, a black body, and lobed toes, and is about 15 inches in length.

Common Coot (Fulica atra).

The nests, which are very large, strong, and compact, are composed of reeds and rank water herbage, built sometimes near the water's edge, and sometimes on small islets at some distance from the shore. Should the nest be set adrift by a rise of water, the female coot seems in nowise disturbed, but sits composedly on her eggs until it is stranded. The coot of India, China, and Japan is said to be identical with that of Europe, but the North American coot is now recognized as a distinct species, and has received the name of F. Wilsoni.

Cootie (kú'ti), s. An epithet applied to birds whose legs are clad with feathers. [Scotch.]

Ye cootic moorcocks; cronally craw. Burns.

Cop (kop), n. [Probably from the Celtic; comp. W. cop, the top of anything, copa, a top, a tuft or crest, Gael. copan, the boss of a shield.] 1. The head or top of a thing, especially the top of a hill. (Old and provincial.) 2. A tuft on the head of birds. 3. The conical ball of thread formed on the spindle of a wheel or spinning-frame. 4. A merlon or portion of a battlement.

Copaiba, Copaiba (kō-pá'ba, kō-pá'va), n.

Copaiba Plant (Copaifera officinalis).

[Sp. and Pg.] The name of a balsam and oil. The balsam of copaiba or capivi is a liquid resinous juice, flowing from incisions made in the stem of a plant, Copaifera officinalis, and several other species of the genus, growing in Brazil, Peru, &c. (See COPAIFERA.) It consists of several resins dissolved in a volatile oil. The resins are partly acid and partly neutral, the oil is clear, colourless, and has an aromatic odour; it is for the most part made up of a hydrocarbon ($C_{10}H_{16}$). It is used in medicine, especially in affections of the mucous membranes.

Copaifera (kō-pá'fē-ra), n. A genus of plants, nat. order Leguminosae, consisting of trees with abruptly pinnate leaves and small whitish flowers. They are natives of tropical America, with the exception of two species found in tropical Africa. The species yield the balsam of copaiba. See COPAIBA.

Copal (kō-pál), n. [Mex. copalli, a generic name of resins.] The resinous product of several different tropical trees. It is hard, shining, transparent, citron coloured, and odoriferous, and contains at least five distinct resins. Copal may be dissolved by digestion in linseed-oil, with a heat little less than sufficient to boil or decompose the oil. This solution diluted with spirit of turpentine forms a beautiful transparent varnish, which when properly applied, and slowly dried, is exceedingly durable and hard, and is susceptible of a fine polish. This varnish is applied to snuff-boxes, tea-boards, and other utensils. There are various modes of preparing it. Indian copal is produced by Vateria indica; it is known in England by the name of gum-guani. Brazilian copal flows from several species of Hymenaea, and from Trachylobium martinicense, both of the nat. order Leguminosae. Madagascar copal, from Hymenaea verrucosa. Zanzibar copal, from Trachylobium Hornemannianum.

Copalche Bark (kō-pál'hé bärk), n. The bark so called is obtained from two widely different plants; the Mexican is the copalche bush, which is Croton pseudo-china, nat. order Euphorbiaceae, the Brazilian is the copalche plant, Strychnos pseudo-quina, nat. order Loganiaceae. It resembles cascarilla bark in its properties.

Copalin, Copaline (kō-pál'in, kō-pál'in), n. Highgate resin, a fossil resin found in roundish lumps in the blue clay of Highgate Hill, resembling copal resin in appearance and some of its characteristics. It contains carbon 85.4 per cent., hydrogen 11.2, oxygen 2.7, and ash 0.12.

Coparcenary (kō-pár'sen-á-ri), n. [L. co- for com, and Norm. parcenier, parcenery. See PARCENER.] Partnership in inheritance; joint heirship; joint right of succession or joint succession to an estate of inheritance.

It is not, as in France, to the exclusion of females, nor, as in England, giving them the same succession after males as in real estate, only excluding coparcenary. Brougham.

Coparcener (kō-pár'sen-ér), n. [L. co- for com, and E. parcenier (which see).] A coheir; one who has an equal portion of the inheritance of his or her ancestor with others.

All the coparceners together make but one heir, and have but one estate among them. Blackstone.

Coparceners take by descent, joint tenants by purchase. Blackstone.

Coparceny (kō-pár'sen-ri), n. An equal share of an inheritance. See COPARCENARY.

Copart (kō-párt), v. t. To share.

For, of all miseries, I hold that chief Wretched to be, when some reports our grief. Shakspeare.

Copartment (kō-párt'ment), n. A compartment. Warton.

Copartner (kō-párt'nér), n. [L. co- for com, and E. partner (which see).] 1. One who has a share in a common stock for transacting business, or who is jointly concerned with one or more persons in carrying on trade or other business; a partner; an associate, particularly in trade or manufacture. 2. A sharer; a partaker; as, copartners of our loss.

So should I have copartners in my pain: And fellowship in woe doth woe assuage. Shakspeare.

Copartnership (kō-párt'nér-ship), n. 1. Joint concern in business; a state of having a joint share in a common stock, or a joint interest and concern in business, particularly in trade and manufacture. 2. The persons who have a joint concern.

Copartnary (kō-párt'nér-ri), n. Copartner-ship.

Copatain (kō-pá-tán), s. [L. copatimus, from L. caput, the head, influenced by O. E. cop, the head.] High-crowned; pointed.—Copatain hat, a hat of the form of a sugar-loaf. 'A Copatain hat made on a Flemish block.' Shakspeare.

Copatrist (kō-pá'tríst), n. A joint patriot.

Copayva (kō-pá'va), n. The same as Copaiba.

Cope (kóp), n. [Apparently a modification of cap and cope (which see), comp. Sp. copa, the roof or vault of an oven. The connection of meaning is however with this origin is not very clear. From this come cooping and cooping-stone.] 1. A cover for the head. John-son. 2. An ecclesiastical vestment resembling bling a cloak (which it originally was), worn in processions, at vespers, at benediction, consecration, and other sacred functions. It is semicircular in form, sleeveless, but furnished with a hood, and is fastened across the breast by a clasp called a moose. Along the straight edge of the semicircle there runs an ermine, often most magnificently embroidered with figures of saints, heraldic or symbolical devices, and adorned with jewels, pearls, or precious stones. The cope is worn by the pope and other bishops, as well as by priests. As distinguished from the chasuble, it is a processional vestment, while the chasuble

1. To bargain for; to buy — 2. To make reserves for; to reward.

Have, by your wisdom, let this day acquitted
(Of grievous penalties, in sin wherein,
Three thousand deaths, due unto the Jew,
We freely take your courteous pains without.) Shak.

Copper (kōp'per), n. [L cuprum, from cuprum (cup), Cyprian brass, from Cyprus, an island in the Mediterranean whence the Romans got their best copper. The D. Deper O. Deper have the same origin.] 1. A metal of a pale red colour tinged with yellow. Next to gold, silver, and platinum, it is the most ductile and malleable of the metals, and it is more elastic than any metal except steel, and the most common of all the metals except aluminium. It is found native in laminae or fibres, in a gangue almost always quartzose; it is also found crystallized, and in grains or superficial laminae on stones or iron. It is not altered by water but is tarnished by exposure to the air, and is at last covered with a green carbonate. Copper in sheets is much used for covering the bottoms of ships, for boilers and other utensils, mixed with tin and zinc. It is used in enamel painting, dyeing, &c. mixed with tin, it forms bell metal, with a smaller proportion, bronze, and with zinc, it forms brass, pinchbeck, &c. When taken into the body it operates as a violent emetic, and all its preparations are violent poisons. In minerals the genus copper includes about thirteen different species, and each of these contains a great many varieties. It occurs combined with sulphur, but principally with sulphur and iron, forming a double sulphide commonly called copper pyrites, or yellow copper ore. It is found also combined with oxygen, forming the ruby copper ore. It occurs also in a state of combination with some acids. 2. A vessel made of copper, particularly a large boiler. — 3. Copper money; small change.

My trench filled my pocket with copper. Franklin.

Copyright (kō'pī-rit), n. The exclusive privilege which the law allows an author (or his assignee) of printing, reprinting, publishing, and selling his own original work. By acts of parliament 5 and 6 Vict. xiv the copyright of every book published in the lifetime of its author endures for his life and for seven years after his death, or, if these seven years expire before the end of forty-two years from the date of the first publication of the work, then the copyright endures for forty-two years from that date. The copyright in a book published after the death of its author endures for forty-two years, and belongs to the proprietor of the manuscript. The property in designs, prints, engravings, and photographs is guaranteed for the term of twenty-eight years from date of first publication. Copyright in dramatic works and musical compositions is also protected for a term of twenty-eight years after date of first publication, no person having a right to give public performances of the protected works under a penalty of not less than 50s. Copyright in sculptures, models, or casts, extends for fourteen years when duly registered. The right in designs for articles of manufacture is granted for various periods from nine months to three years according to the class of manufacture. International copyright, an international arrangement by which the copyright of an author residing in one country is protected in such countries as are parties to the arrangement. Such an agreement exists between Britain and several foreign countries.

It was property of iron, but where more exercise or sport was the object it might be of wood, having a socket for the end of the shaft of the lance to go into, and terminating in three points so as somewhat to resemble a little crown, whence the name. The name was sometimes used as synonymous with lifting lance or spear. Written also Corneal, Corneal, and sometimes Corneal and Corneal. 'Sports garments, that is, small, vamplate, and grasps.' Quoted by Fowler. See TOURNAMENT.

Coronellidae (kō-rō-nēl-ī-dē), n. pl. [Dim., formed from L. corona, a crown, and Gr. oides, likeness.] A sub-family of ophiidian reptiles, family Colubridae, characterized by a flat belly, broad back, a rather flat head, and by having the shields of the head regular. It includes several genera, as Panampophyllus, confined to South Africa, and Coronella, found in most parts of the world. To the former belongs the eck-skip-skip of South Africa, a handsome, lively reptile about 1 foot long. The C. aspidota, of about the same size and resembling the viper, is common on the Continent and has been found in England. They feed on insects, lizards, &c.

Coroner (ko-rō-nēr), n. [L. coroner, from corona, a crown.] The title of an office established in Anglo-Saxon times, of which the holder was, as his name indicates, in a peculiar manner the officer of the crown, whose private rights of property whether arising by descent, wardship, or consisting in demesne, it was his business to maintain and superintend in the county for which he acted. The principal function for which the coroner now exercises is that of holding inquests on the bodies of such as either die, or are supposed to die, a violent death. For this purpose he is to go to the place where any person is slain or has died suddenly, and by his warrant to the bailiffs or constables of the place summon a jury out of the neighbouring parishes or townships to make inquiry upon view of the body, and he and the jury are to inquire into the manner of killing, and all circumstances that occasioned the party's death, who were present, whether the dead person was known, where he lay the night before, &c., and to examine the body for signs of violence. He is also empowered to summon witnesses, and take their evidence in writing. When the jury have brought in their verdict the coroner is to return the inquisition to the next assizes or commission of jail delivery in the county, where the murder or murders may be proceeded against. The duty of a coroner is limited to a county or a division of a county. Most commonly there are three or four coroners in each county in England, but the number varies, there being in some six or seven. The council of every borough to which a separate court of quarter sessions has been granted is empowered to appoint a coroner for the borough. By the act 7 and 8 Vict. all coroners may be appointed for districts within counties, instead of the counties at large. Coroners of counties are elected for life, under the direction of stat. 23 Ed. III. vi., by the freeholders. There are no coroners in Scotland, but somewhat similar duties are performed by the procurator-fiscal. — The coroner of the royal household is an officer appointed to take inquisitions upon the bodies of all persons slain in the palace or in any house where the sovereign may happen to be. He has exclusive jurisdiction of the county coroner. See INQUIRY.

Corpuscule (kor'pu-si), n. [L. corpusculum, dim. of corpus, body.] 1. A minute particle, molecule, or atom of matter.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if these corpusculi can be discovered by microscopes. Newton.

2. In physiol. a minute animal cell generally inclosing granular matter, and sometimes a spheroidal body called a nucleus; as, blood corpuscles, chyle corpuscles.

The exterior of each (red) corpuscule is denser than its interior, which contains a semi-fluid, or quite fluid matter, of a red colour, called hemoglobin. By proper processes this may be resolved into an albuminous substance termed globulin, and a peculiar colouring matter, which is called hematin. . . . The sac-like colourless corpuscule, with its nucleus, is what is called a nucleated cell. Huxley.

Corpuscular (kor'pus'kü-lér), a. Relating to corpuscles or small particles, supposed to be the constituent materials of all large bodies. — Corpuscular forces, those forces which modify and regulate the sensible forms and mechanical relations of tangible matter, and which exert their action on the particles of bodies; corpuscular force, or corpuscular action, is the same as cohesive force. — Corpuscular philosophy, that system of philosophy which attempts to account for the phenomena of nature by the motion, figure, rest, position, &c., of the minute particles of matter. It is otherwise known by the name of the Atomic Philosophy. — Corpuscular theory, a theory for explaining the nature of light. According to this theory the sun and all other luminous bodies have the property of emitting exceedingly minute particles of their substance with prodigious velocity, and these particles entering the eye produce the sensation of vision. It has also been termed the Emission Theory. See LIGHT and UNDULATORY.

Corpuscularian (kor'pus'kü-lä'ri-an), a. Corpuscular. [Rare or obsolete.]

Corpuscularian (kor'pus'kü-lä'ri-an), n. An advocate for the corpuscular philosophy, or corpuscular theory of light.

—Corrosive sublimates, the bichloride of mercury (HgCl₂), prepared by subliming an intimate mixture of equal parts of common salt and mercuric sulphate; it is a white crystalline solid, and is an acid poison of great virulence; the stomach-pump and emetics are the surest preventives of its deleterious effects when accidentally swallowed; white of egg has also been found serviceable in allaying its poisonous influence upon the stomach. It requires 20 parts of cold water but only 2 of boiling water for its solution. It is used in medicine in doses of $\frac{1}{16}$ th to $\frac{1}{4}$ th of a grain. Corrosive sublimates is a powerful antiseptic, and hence is employed to preserve anatomical preparations. Wood, cordage, canvas, &c., also, when soaked in a solution of it, are found to be better able to resist decay when exposed to the combined destructive influence of air and moisture.

Corrosive (ko-rós'iv), n. 1. That which has the quality of eating or wearing gradually; a corroding substance.

Corrosives are substances which, when placed in contact with living parts, gradually disorganize them. Jungermann.

Corrugated (ko-rū-gat-ed) p. and s. Wrinkled. — Corrugated iron, common sheet iron or 'galvanized' iron, which has been bent into folds or wrinkled by being passed between two powerful rollers, the ridges of the one corresponding to the grooves of the other, or by hydrostatic pressure upon a movable upper block driven upon a lower one. Iron thus treated will resist a much greater strain than flat iron, each groove representing a half rib. A single sheet, so thin as to be unable to stand without bending when placed vertically, will, after corrugation, sustain 700 lbs. without bending. Walls and roofs of temporary buildings, railway sheds and bridges, emigrants' houses, churches, sheds for dock-yards, &c., are now extensively made of iron thus treated. From its great lightness and power of resisting violent shocks, light boats have been made of it, and it has been proposed as the best material for lifeboats.
